

UNIVERSITY OF ST. MICHAEL'S

ESF

3 1761 01862999 8

OLD ENGLISH PLAYS.

VOL. XII.

THE OLD COUPLE. A WOMAN NEVER VEXED.

THE ORDINARY.

THE LONDON CHANTICLEERS.

THE SHEPHERDS' HOLIDAY. THE TRUE TROJANS.

THE LOST LADY.

FOR FREE SERVICE

A SELECT COLLECTION
OF
OLD ENGLISH PLAYS.

ORIGINALLY PUBLISHED BY ROBERT DODSLEY
IN THE YEAR 1744.

FOURTH EDITION,

NOW FIRST CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED, REVISED AND ENLARGED, WITH THE NOTES OF ALL THE COMMENTATORS, AND NEW NOTES

BY

W. CAREW HAZLITT.

VOLUME THE TWELFTH.

LONDON:
REEVES AND TURNER, 196 STRAND,
AND 100 CHANCERY LANE, W.C.
1875.

THE OLD COUPLE.

VOL. XII.

A

EDITION.

The Old Couple. A Comedy. By Thomas May, Esq. ; London, Printed by J. Cottrel, for Samuel Speed, at the signe of the Printing-press in S. Paul's Churchyard. 1658. 4°.

[A MS. note in one of the former editions says :
“ This comedy is pleasingly and fluently written, and though it contains little poetry, is not without some eloquent and beautiful passages. The first scene is the best in the play.”]

INTRODUCTION.

It seems probable that this comedy, as it is called, was never acted, and on the title-page of the old edition (not printed until 1658, eight years after the death of the author), it is not mentioned that it was performed by any private or public company. This fact was usually stated, though during the period when the theatres were silenced exceptions were not very uncommon. It is pretty obvious, however, from the general structure of the piece and the nature of the dialogue, that "The Old Couple" was not calculated or intended by the author to please the multitude. No inconsiderable part of the plot, and some of the characters, may be considered allegorical, and for the sake of preserving it, some constraint is used in a few of the incidents, and forced and unnatural conversions take place among the persons.¹

¹ [It is difficult to allow that this piece is particularly allegorical in any of its parts or characters. It has the air of a drama which had lain by for some time, and been hastily finished, as some of the incidents and characters are not developed with due regard to dramatic propriety. The conversion of Earthworm, especially, is unnaturally abrupt and violent.]

As to the period when it was written, judging from internal evidence, it might be thought that May produced "The Old Couple" late in life, and it was certainly the last printed of any of his works. It will be observed that two lines in the last scene of this play close "The Goblins" of Sir John Suckling.

"Gently my joys distil,
Lest you should break the vessel you should fill."

Sir J. Suckling does not introduce them as a quotation, but nevertheless, from the situation in which they are found in his comedy, it seems likely that they were so, and that they originally belong to May. If this supposition be correct, "The Old Couple" must have been written before 1641, in which year Suckling died, and the latter must have seen it in MS.¹

¹ ["The Goblins" was publicly performed, whereas the "Old Couple" does not seem to have been so. Suckling died early in 1641. I confess that the evidence appears to me to lie strongly against May, who was a great borrower—even from himself, the most allowable kind of plagiarism.]

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN.

SIR ARGENT SCRAPE, an old covetous rich knight.

EARTHWORM, an old miserly niggard.

MASTER FREEMAN.

EUGENY, Sir Argent Scrape's nephew.

EUPHUES (Freeman's nephew) Scudmore's friend.

THEODORE, Earthworm's virtuous son.

SCUDMORE, supposed to be slain by Eugeny.

FRUITFUL, the Lady Covet's chaplain (Scudmore disguised).

BARNET.

DOTTEREL, a gull, married to the Lady Whimsey.

TRUSTY, the Lady Covet's steward.

JASPER, Earthworm's servant.

Three neighbours of Earthworm's.

Officers.

WOMEN.

The LADY COVET, betrothed to Sir Argent Scrape.

MATILDA (Earthworm's niece), Scudmore's love.

ARTEMIA (Freeman's daughter), Eugeny's love.

The LADY WHIMSEY, married to Dotterel.

THE OLD COUPLE.

ACT I.

EUGENY solus.

EUG. This is the hour which fair Artemia
Promis'd to borrow from all company,
And bless me only with it; to deny
Her beauteous presence to all else, and shine
On me, poor me! Within this garden here,
This happy garden once, while I was happy,¹
And wanted not a free access unto it;
Before my fatal and accursed crime
Had shut these gates of paradise against me;
When I, without control alone might spend
With sweet Artemia in these fragrant walks
The day's short-seeming hours; and (ravish'd) hear
Her sweet discourses of the lily's whiteness,
The blushing rose, blue-mantled violet,
Pale daffodil, and purple hyacinth:
With all the various sweets and painted glories
Of Nature's wardrobe, which were all eclips'd
By her diviner beauty. .But alas!

¹ Former editions—

“ This happy garden, once while I was happy.”

What boots the former happiness I had,
 But to increase my sorrow ?¹ My sad crime
 Has left me now no entrance but by stealth,
 When death and danger dog my vent'rous steps.
 But welcome danger, since thou find'st so fair
 A recompense as my Artemia's sight !

Enter ARTEMIA.

ART. And art thou come, my dearest Eugeny ?
 Has thy true love broke through so many hazards
 To visit me ? I prythee, chide my fondness,
 That did command thee such a dangerous task.
 I did repent it since, and was in hope
 Thou wouldst not come.

EUG. Why hop'd Artemia so ?
 Wouldst thou not see me then ? Or can the hazard

Of ten such lives as mine is countervail
 One glance of favour from thy beauteous eyes ?

ART. Why dost thou use that language to a heart,

Which is thy captive, Eugeny, and lives,
 In nothing happy but in thee ?

EUG. Ah, love !
 There lies my greatest sorrow ; that the storms
 Of spiteful fortune, which o'erwhelm my state,
 Should draw thy constant goodness to a suffring—
 A goodness worthy of the happiest man.

ART. Those storms of fortune will be soon o'er-blown,
 When once thy cause shall be but truly known ;

¹ Dante ("Inferno," c. v.) says—

"Nessun maggior dolore
 Che ricordarsi del tempo felice Ne la miseria."

—Collier.

That chance, not malice, wrought it; and thy pardon

Will be with ease obtain'd.

EUG. It may be, love,
If old Sir Argent do deal truly in it.

ART. But keep thyself conceal'd : do not rashly
Venture two lives in one : or, when thou com'st,
Let it be still in silence of the night.

No visitation then, or other strange
Unlook'd-for accident, can bar our joys.

The moon is now in her full orb, and lends

Securer light to lovers than the sun :

Then only come. But prythee, tell me, love,

How dost thou spend thy melancholy time ?

EUG. Within the covert of yon shady wood,
Which clothes the mountain's rough and craggy top,

A little hovel built of boughs and reeds

Is my abode : from whence the spreading trees

Keep out the sun, and do bestow in lieu

A greater benefit, a safe concealment.

In that secure and solitary place

I give my pleas'd imagination leave

To feast itself with thy supposed presence,

Whose only shadow brings more joy to me,

Than all the substance of the world beside.

ART. Just so alone am I ; nay, want the presence

Of mine own heart, which strays to find out thee.

But who comes to thee to supply thy wants ?

EUG. There Artemia names my happiness—

A happiness which, next thy love, I hold

To be the greatest that the world can give,

And I am proud to name it. I do there

Enjoy a friend, whose sweet society

Makes that dark wood a palace of delight :

One stor'd with all that can commend a man ;

In whom refined knowledge and pure art,

Mixing with true and sound morality,
Is crown'd with piety.

ART. What wonder's this,
Whom thou describ'st?

EUG. But I in vain, alas!
Do strive to make with my imperfect skill
A true dissection of his noble parts:
He loses, love, by all that I can say;
For praise can come no nearer to his worth
Than can a painter with his mimic sun
Express the beauty of Hyperion.

ART. What is his name?

EUG. His name is Theodore,
Rich Earthworm's son, lately come home from travel.

ART. O heavens! his son? Can such a caitiff wretch,
Hated and curs'd by all, have such a son?
The miser lives alone, abhorr'd by all,
Like a disease, yet cannot so be 'scap'd;
But, canker-like, eats through the poor men's hearts,

That live about him: never has commerce
With any, but to ruin them; his house
Inhospitable as the wilderness,
And never look'd upon but with a curse.
He hoards, in secret places of the earth,
Not only bags of treasure, but his corn,
Whose every grain he prizes 'bove a life,
And never prays at all but for dear years.

EUG. For his son's sake, tread gently on his fame.

ART. O love! his fame cannot be redeemed
From obloquy; but thee I trust so far,
As highly to esteem his worthy son.

EUG. That man is all, and more than I have said:

His wondrous virtues will hereafter make

The people all forgive his father's ill :
 I was acquainted with him long ago
 In foreign parts. And, now I think on't, love,
 He'll be the fittest man to be acquainted
 With all our secrecies, and be a means
 To further us ; and think I trust his truth,
 That dare so much commend his worth to thee.

ART. He is my neighbour here : that house is Earthworm's,
 That stands alone beside yon grove of trees ;
 And fear not, dearest love, I'll find a means
 To send for him : do you acquaint him first.

[Exeunt.]

EUPHUES, DOTTEREL, BARNET.

EUPH. Then shall I tell my cousin that you are A younger brother, Master Dotterel ?

DOT. O yes, by any means, sir.

EUPH. What's your reason ?

DOT. A crotchet, sir, a crotchet that I have :
 Here's one can tell you I have twenty of 'em.

BAR. Euphues, dissuade him not ; he is resolv'd
 To keep his birth and fortunes both conceal'd ;
 Yet win her so, or no way. He would know
 Whether himself be truly lov'd or no ;
 And not his fortunes only.

EUPH. Well, access
 You have already found ; pursue it, sir,
 But give me leave to wonder at your way.
 Another wooer, to obtain his love,
 Would put on all his colours ; stretch t' appear
 At his full height, or a degree beyond it ;
 Belie his fortunes ; borrow what he wanted ;
 Not make himself less than he truly is.
 What reason is there that a man possess'd
 Of fortunes large enough, that they may come boldly
 A welcome suitor to herself and friends,

And, ten to one, speed in his suit the fair
 And usual way, should play the fool, and lose
 His precious time in such a hopeless wooing!

DOT. Alas, sir! what is a gentleman's time?

BAR. Euphues, he tells you true; there are some brains

Can never lose their time, whate'er they do:
 Yet I can tell you, he has read some books.

DOT. Do not disparage me.

BAR. I warrant thee;

And in those books he says he finds examples
 Of greatest beauties that have so been won.

EUPH. O, in "Parismus" and the "Knight o' th' Sun!"¹

Are those your authors?

DOT. Yes, and those are good ones.

Why should a man of worth, though but a shepherd,

Despair to get the love of a king's daughter?

EUPH. I prythee, Barnet, how hast thou screw'd up

This fool to such a monstrous confidence?

BAR. He needs no screwing up; but let him have His swing a little.

EUPH. He shall have it freely.

But you have seen your mistress, Master Dotterel?
 How do you find her? coming?

DOT. That's all one;

I know what I know.

BAR. He has already got

Some footing in her favour.

EUPH. But I doubt

He'll play the tyrant; make her doat too long,
 Wear the green-sickness as his livery,
 And pine a year or two.

¹ Two romances of the time, very well known, often reprinted, and frequently mentioned in old authors.—Collier.

DOT. She's not the first
That has done so for me.

EUPH. But if you use
My cousin so, I shall not take it well.

DOT. O, I protest I have no such meaning, sir.
See, here she comes! the Lady Whimsey too.

Enter LADY WHIMSEY, with ARTEMIA.

LADY W. I thought, sweetheart, th' hadst wanted company.

ART. Why, so I did—yours, madam.

LADY W. Had I known
Your house had been so full of gallants now,
I would have spar'd my visit. But 'tis all one,
I have met a friend here.

EUPH. Your poor servant, madam.

LADY W. I was confessing of your cousin here
About th' affairs of love.

EUPH. Your ladyship, I hope, will shrieve her gently.¹

LADY W. But I tell her
She shall not thank me now for seeing her;
For I have business hard by. I am going
A suitor to your old rich neighbour here—Earthworm.

EUPH. A suitor! He is very hard
In granting anything, especially
If it be money.

LADY W. Yes, my suit's for money;
Nay, all his money, and himself to boot.

¹ i. e., Shrieve her, hear her at confession. So in Shakespeare's "King Richard III."—

"What, talking with a priest, Lord Chamberlain?
Your lordship hath no shrieving-work in hand."

BAR. His money would do well without himself.

LADY W. And with himself.

BAR. Alas! your ladyship

Should too much wrong your beauty, to bestow it Upon one that cannot use it, and debar
More able men their wishes.

EUPH. That's true, Barnet,
If she should bar all other men: but that
Would be too great a cruelty.

ART. Do you hear my cousin, madam?

LADY W. Yes, he will be heard:

Rather than fail, he'll give himself the hearing.
But, prythee, Euphues, tell me plainly now,
What thou dost think of me? I love thy freeness
Better than any flattery in the world.

EUPH. I think you wondrous wise.

LADY W. In what?

EUPH. In that

That makes or mars a woman—I mean love.

LADY W. Why, prythee?

EUPH. I think you understand so well
What the true use of man is, that you'll ne'er Trouble your thoughts with care, or spoil your beauty

With the green-sickness, to obtain a thing
Which you can purchase a discreeter way.

ART. How do you like this, madam?

LADY W. Wondrous well;

'Tis that I look'd for. But what entertainment Would old rich Earthworm give us, do you think?

BAR. Unless your presence, madam, could infuse
A nobler soul into him, 'tis much fear'd
'Twould be but mean.

LADY W. Because (you'll say) he's covetous?
Tut! I can work a change in any man.
If I were married to him, you should see
What I would make him.

EUPH. I believe we should,
If cuckold's horns were visible.

ART. But could

Your ladyship be pleas'd with such a husband ?

LADY W. Who could not well be pleas'd with such a fortune ?

ART. Wealth cannot make a man.

LADY W. But his wealth, lady,
Can make a woman.

EUPH. Yet, I doubt, old Earthworm
Would prove too subtle to be govern'd so.
You'll find him, madam, an old crabbed piece :
Some gentle fool were better for a husband.

ART. Fie, cousin, how thou talk'st !

LADY W. He's in the right :

Fools are the only husbands ; one may rule 'em.
Why should not we desire to use men so,
As they would us ? I have heard men protest
They would have their wives silly, and not studied
In anything, but how to dress themselves ;
And not so much as able to write letters.
Just such a husband would I wish to have,
So qualifi'd, and not a jot beyond it ;
He should not have the skill to write or read.

ART. What could you get by that ?

LADY W. I should be sure

He could not read my letters ; and for bonds,
When I should have occasion to use money,
His mark would serve.

ART. I am not of your mind :

I would not have a fool for all the world.

BAR. No, fairest lady, your perfections
None but the wisest and the best of men
Can truly find and value.

DOT. And I protest, lady,

I honour you for not loving a fool.

LADY W. You would love a wife, it seems, that loves not you ?

EUPH. A tart jest, Barnet !

BAR. But he feels it not. [Aside.]

EUPH. Fie, Master Dotterel ! 'tis not nobly done
In you to hate a fool : a generous spirit
Would take the weakest' part ; and fools, you know,
Are weakest still.

DOT. Faith, Master Euphues,
I must confess I have a generous spirit,
And do a little sympathise with fools :
I learn'd that word from a good honest man.
But hark you, cousin Barnet, this same lady
Is a brave woman.

BAR. Are you taken with her ?

DOT. I love a wit with all my heart.

BAR. 'Tis well ;

He is already taken off, I see,
From fair Artemia, or may be soon ;
Upon this t'other I may build a fortune. [Aside.]

EUPH. But, madam, if your ladyship would marry

Upon those terms, 'twere better that you took Old Earthworm's son.

LADY W. Has he a son, I prythee ?

EUPH. Yes, lately come from travel, as they say,

We have not seen him yet ; he has kept close
Since his arrival ; people give him out
To be his father's own.

LADY W. Nay, then I swear
I'll none of him. If he be covetous,
And young, I shall be troubled too long with him :
I had rather have the old one.

ART. Here's my father.

Enter MASTER FREEMAN.

FREE. Health to this good society : I am sorry

That my poor house must not to-day enjoy
 The happiness to entertain you all.
 We are invited to th' old Lady Covet's;
 And thither must our company remove.

LADY W. Sir, I'll be govern'd by you. I was bold

To come and see Mistress Artemia.

FREE. She's much beholden to your ladyship
 For doing her that honour.

EUPH. Tell me, uncle:

I hear Sir Argent Scrape is at her house.

FREE. Nephew, 'tis true; and, which thou'lt wonder at,

That marriage, which we talk'd of as a jest,
 In earnest now's concluded of, and shall
 To-morrow morning be solemnised.

EUPH. Betwixt Sir Argent and the Lady Covet?
 I do not think it strange; there's but one hedge
 Has a long time divided them—I mean Their large estates; and 'tis th' estate that marries.

FREE. But is't not strange, nay, most unnatural—
 And I may say ridiculous, for those years
 To marry, and abuse the ordinance?
 My Lady Covet is, at least, fourscore,
 And he, this year, is fourscore and fifteen:
 Besides, he has been bed-rid long, and lame
 Of both his feet.

EUPH. Uncle, he's not too old
 To love—I mean her money; and in that
 The chiefest end of marriage is fulfill'd:
 He will increase and multiply his fortunes:
 Increase, you know, is the true end of marriage!

FREE. They have already almost the whole country.

EUPH. But you shall see how now they'll propagate.

FREE. Is such a marriage lawful?

EUPH. Ah! good uncle, Dispute not that, the church has nought in this;

Their lawyer is the priest that marries them,
The banns of matrimony are the indentures,
The bounds and landmarks are the ring that joins them.

ART. But there's no love at all.

EUPH. Yes, pretty cousin,
If thou art read in amorous books, thou'lt find
That Cupid's arrow has a golden head ;
And 'twas a golden shaft that wounded them.

FREE. Well, thither we must go ; but, prythee, nephew,
Forbear thy jesting there.

EUPH. I warrant you ;
I'll flatter the old lady, and persuade her
How well she looks : but when they go to bed,
I'll write their epitaph.

FREE. How, man ! their epitaph ?
Their epithalamium thou mean'st.

EUPH. No, sirs ;
Over their marriage-bed I'll write their ages,
And only say, Here lies Sir Argent Scrape,
Together with his wife, the Lady Covet.
And whosoever reads it will suppose
The place to be a tomb, no marriage-bed.

LADY W. How strangely thou art taken with this wedding,
Before thou see'st it !

EUPH. And then, let me see :
To fit them for an Hymeneal song,
Instead of those so high and spirited strains,
Which the old Grecian lovers us'd to sing
When lusty bridegrooms rifled maidenheads,
I'll sing a quiet dirge, and bid them sleep

In peaceful rest, and bid the clothes, instead
Of earth, lie gently on their aged bones——¹

¹ These lines seem a parody on the following one in "Bonduca," by Beaumont and Fletcher, act iv. sc. 3—

"Lie lightly on my ashes, gentle earth."

The time when Prior wrote his beautiful Ode to the Memory of Colonel George Villiers, drowned in the river Piave, in Friuli, 1703, is so near the period in which Mr Pope composed his elegy to the memory of an unfortunate lady, that it is difficult to say which of these great men borrowed from the other. It appears certain, however, that one of them, in the following lines, was indebted to his friend, unless it can be supposed that both of them were obliged to the above line of Beaumont and Fletcher. Prior says—

"Lay the dead hero graceful in a grave
(The only honour he can now receive),
And fragrant mould upon his body throw,
And plant the warrior laurel o'er his brow ;
Light lie the earth, and flourish green the bough."

Mr Pope writes thus—

"What though no sacred earth allow thee room,
Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb ;
Yet shall thy grave with rising flowers be drest,
And thy green turf lie lightly on thy breast."

I know not why we should suppose that Pope borrowed from Prior, or that either of them was indebted to Beaumont and Fletcher on this occasion. Sit tibi terra levis! is a wish expressed in many of the ancient Roman inscriptions. So in that on Pylades—

"Dicite qui legitis, solito de more, sepulto, Pro meritls, Pylade, sit tibi terra levis!"

Again, in the sepulchral dialogue supposed to pass between Atimetus and Homonœa—

"Sit tibi terra levis, muller dignissima vita!"

Again, in Propertius, El. xvii. lib. 1—

"Et mihi non ullo pondere terra foret."

Again, in Ovid—

"Et sit humus cineri non onerosa tuo!"

Thus also Juvenal, Sat. vii.—

"Di majorum umbris tenuem et sine pondere terram, Spirantesque crocos, et in urna perpetuum ver!"

FREE. Thou'lt ne'er have done. Well, gallants,
'tis almost

The time that calls us : I must needs be gone.

LADY W. We'll wait upon you, sir.

FREE. Your servant, madam.

[Exeunt LADY WHIMSEY, FREEMAN, DOTTEREL, and BARNET.

ART. Stay, cousin, I have a request to thee.

EUPH. Thou canst not fear that I'll deny it thee.

Speak it : 'tis done.

ART. Why, then, in short, 'tis this—

Old Earthworm, cousin, has a son (they say)
Lately come home ; his name, as I have heard,
Is Theodore.

EUPH. Yes, I have heard of him.

ART. I would entreat you, by some means or other,

To draw him hither ; I'd fain speak with him :
Ask not the cause, but do what I request—
You may hereafter know.

Again, in Persius, Sat. i.—

“ Non levior cippus nunc imprimit ossa ?
..... nunc non e manibus illis,
Nunc non e tumulo fortunataque favilla
Nascentur violæ ? ”

On the contrary, Sit tibi terra gravis and Urgeat ossa lapis were usual maledictions, the ancients supposing that the soul remained for some time after death with the body, and was partner in its confinement. The latter of these wishes is ludicrously adopted by Dr Evans, in his epitaph on Sir J. Vanbrugh—

“ Lie heavy on him, earth ! for he Laid many a heavy weight on thee.”

It may be observed that such ideas, however poetical, have no great degree of propriety when introduced into Christian elegies, as we have no belief that the soul is in danger of being oppressed by a monument or stifled in a grave.—Stevens.

EUP. Well, I'll not question't,
But bring him hither, though I know him not.

ART. Cousin, farewell; I shall be look'd for straight. [Exit ARTEMIA.]

Manet EUPHUES.

EUPH. Rich Earthworm's son ! why, in the name of wonder,
Should it be her desire to speak with him ?
She knows him not. Well, let it be a riddle ;
I have not so much wit as to expound it ;
Nor yet so little as to lose my thoughts
Or study to find out what the no reason
Of a young wench's will is. Should I guess—
I know not what to think ; she may have heard
That he's a proper man, and so desire
To satisfy herself ? What reason then
Can she allege to him ? Tut, that's not it :
Her beauty and large dow'r need not to seek Out any suitors ; and the odious name
Of his old wretched father would quite choke it.
Or have some tattling gossips or the maids
Told her, perchance, that he's a conjuror ?
He goes in black : they say he is a scholar :
Has been beyond sea, too ; there it may lie :
And he must satisfy her longing thought,
What or how many husbands she shall have ;
Of what degree ; upon what night she shall Dream of the man ; when she shall fast,¹ and walk
In the churchyard, to see him passing by,

¹ These customs are still preserved by the inferior ranks of females in different parts of the kingdom. Among others, they frequently fast on St Agnes' Eve, and at the same time make use of several singular rites and ceremonies ; all which are described and ridiculed in Gay's comedy of the "Wife of Bath." See also ["Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," 1870, i. 20, et alibi.]

Just in those clothes that first he comes a suitor.
 These things may be ; but why should she make
 me
 To be her instrument ? Some of the men
 Or maids might do't as well. Well, since you have Us'd me, fair cousin, I will sound your drifts, Or't shall go hard. The fellow may abuse her ;
 Therefore, I'll watch him too, and straight about it.
 But now I think on't, I'll solicit him
 By letter first, and meet him afterward. [Exit.]

ACT II.

EARTHWORM, THEODORE.

EARTH. I do not more rejoice in all my stores,
 My wealthy bags, fill'd garners, crowded chests,
 And all the envi'd heaps that I have glean'd
 With so long care and labour, than I do
 In thy most frugal nature, Theodore,
 Concurring just with mine. In thee, my son,
 I see, methinks, a perpetuity
 Of all the projects which my soul has hatch'd,
 And their rich fruits : I see my happiness,
 When I consider what great hoards of wealth,
 With long care rak'd together, I have seen
 Even in a moment scatter'd ; when I view
 The gaudy heirs of thriving aldermen
 Fleeting like short-liv'd bubbles into air,
 And all that fire expiring in one blaze,
 That was so long a-kindling. But do thou,
 Do thou, my son, go on, and grow in thrift ;
 It is a virtue that rewards itself.
 'Tis matterless in goodness who excels ;
 He that hath coins hath all perfections else.

THEO. Sir, I am wholly yours, and never can Degenerate from your frugality ;

Or, if my nature did a little stray,
Your good example would direct it still,
Till it were grown in me habitual.

EARTH. 'Twill be a greater patrimony to thee
Than all my wealth : strive to be perfect in't ;
Study the rules. One rule is general.
And that is, give away nothing, son ;
For thrift is like a journey ; every gift,
Though ne'er so small, is a step back again.
He that would rise to riches or renown
Must not regard, though he pull millions down.

THEO. That lesson, sir, is easy to be learn'd.

EARTH. Laugh at those fools that are ambitious
Of empty air, to be styl'd liberal !
That sell their substance for the breath of others,
And with the flattering thanks of idle drones
Are swelled; while their solid parts decay.
What clothes to wear ?—the first occasion
Of wearing clothes will teach a wise man best.

THEO. True, sir ; it teacheth us how vain a thing

It is for men to take a pride in that,
Which was at first the emblem of their shame.¹

EARTH. Thou hitt'st it right : but canst thou be content
With my poor diet too ?

THEO. O, wondrous well !

Twas such a diet which that happy age,
'That poets style the golden, first did use.

EARTH. And such a diet to our chests will bring
The golden age again.

¹ Richard Braithwaite printed precisely the same thought in 1621, in his "Times Curtaine Drawne"—

" For who (remembering the cause why clothes were made,
Even then when Adam fled unto his shade,
For covert nakedness) will not blame
Himself to glory in his parents' shame ? "

The coincidence is remarkable.—Collier.

THEO. Beside the gain
 That flows upon us, health and liberty
 Attend on these bare meals : if we all were bless'd
 With such a temperance, what man would fawn,
 Or to his belly sell his liberty ?
 There would be then no slaves, no sycophants
 At great men's tables. If the base Sarmenus
 Or that vile Galba ¹ had been thus content,
 They had not borne the scoffs of Cæsar's board.
 He whose cheap thirst the springs and brooks can quench,
 How many cares is he exempted from ?
 He's not indebted to the merchant's toil,
 Nor fears that pirates' force or storms should rob
 him
 Of rich Canaries or sweet Candian wines :
 He smells nor seeks no feasts ; but in his own
 True strength contracted lives, and there enjoys
 A greater freedom than the Parthian king.

EARTH. Thou mak'st me more in love with my bless'd life.

THEO. Besides, pure cheerful health ever attends
 it ;
 Which made the former ages live so long.
 With riotous banquets sicknesses came in ;
 When death 'gan muster all his dismal band
 Of pale diseases, such as poets feign
 Keep sentinel before the gates of hell,
 And bad them wait about the gluttons' tables,
 Whom they, like venom'd pills in sweetest wines, Deceiv'd, swallow down, and hasten on
 What most they would eschew—untimely death.
 But from our tables here no painful surfeits,

¹ " *Quæ nec Sarmenus iniquus
 Cæsaris ad mensas, nec villa Galba tulisset.* "

No fed diseases grow, to strangle nature
 And suffocate the active brain ; no fevers,
 No apoplexies, palsies, or catarrhs
 Are here, where nature, not entic'd at all
 With such a dangerous bait as pleasant cates,
 Takes in no more than she can govern well.

EARTH. But that which is the greatest comfort, son,

Is to observe with pleasure our rich hoards
 Daily increase, and stuff the swelling bags.
 Come, thou art mine, I see ! Here, take these keys.

[Gives THEODORE the keys.

These keys can show thee such amazing plenty,
 Whose very sight would feed a famish'd country.
 I durst not trust my servants.

THEO. Me you may,
 Who equal with my life do prize your profit.

EARTH. Well, I'll go in : I feel myself half sleepy

After the drink I took.

[Exit.

THEO. 'Twill do you good, sir.
 Work sweetly, gentle cordial ! and restore
 Those spirits again which pining avarice
 Has 'reft him of. Ah me ! how wondrous thin, How lean and wan he looks ! How much,
 alas !

Has he defrauded his poor genius
 In raking wealth, while the pale, grisly sighs
 Of famine dwell upon his aged cheeks.
 O avarice ! than thee a greater plague
 Did ne'er infest the life of wretched man !
 Heaven aid my work ! That rare extraction
 Which he has drunk, beside the nourishment,
 Will cast him in a safe and gentle sleep,
 While I have liberty to work my ends ;
 And with his body's cure a means I'll find
 To cure his fame, and (which is more) his mind.
 Jasper !

Enter JASPER.

JAS. Sir!

THEO. Are those disguises ready,
Which I bespoke?

JAS. They are all fitted, sir.

THEO. Then at the hour, which I appointed
thee,

Invite those people, Jasper; but be true
And secret to me.

JAS. As your own heart, sir.

THEO. Take this: I will reward thy service better,

As soon as these occasions are dispatch'd.

JAS. I thank you, sir. I have a letter for you,
Left here but now, from Master Euphues,
Old Master Freeman's nephew.

THEO. Give it me;

I will anon peruse it. But my haste
Permits not now: Eugeny waits my coming.

[Exit THEODORE.]

JAS. I like this well; yet, if I should prove false
To my old master for my young master's sake,
Who can accuse me? For the reason's plain
And very palpable; I feel it here.

This will buy ale; so will not all the hoards,
Which my old master has: his money serves
For nothing but to look upon; but this Knows what the common use of money is.

Well, for my own part, I'm resolv'd to do Whatever he commands me; he's too honest
To wrong his father in it: if he should,
The worst would be his own another day. [Exit.]

EUGENY solus.

EUG. Just thus, in woods and solitary caves,
The ancient hermits liv'd; but they liv'd happy!
And in their quiet contemplations found

More real comforts than society
 Of men could yield, than cities could afford,
 Or all the lustres of a court could give.
 But I have no such sweet preservatives
 Against the sadness of this desert place.
 I am myself a greater wilderness
 Than are these woods, where horror and dismay
 Make their abodes ; while different passions
 By turn do reign in my distracted soul.
 Fortune makes this conclusion general—
 All things shall help th' unfortunate man to fall.
 First sorrow comes, and tells me I have done
 A crime whose foulness must deserve a sea
 Of penitent tears to wash me clean again.
 Then sear¹ steps in, and tells me, if surpris'd,
 My wretched life is forfeit to the law.
 When these have done, enters the tyrant love,
 And sets before me fair Artemia ;
 Displays her virtues and perfections ;
 Tells me that all those graces, all those beauties,
 Suffer for me, for my unhappiness,
 And wounds me more in her than in myself.
 Ah, Theodore ! would I could ever sleep
 But when thou com'st, for in myself I find
 No drop of comfort ? Welcome, dearest friend !

Enter THEODORE.

THEO. Pardon the slowness of my visit, friend ;
 For such occasions have detain'd me hence,
 As, if thou knew'st, I know thou wouldst excuse.

EUG. I must confess, I thought the hours too long ;

But the fruition of thy presence now
 Makes me forget it all.

THEO. Collect thyself,

¹ [Conscience.]

Thou droop'st too much, my dearest Eugeny,
 And art too harsh and sour a censurer
 Of that unhappy crime which thou wert forc'd
 Lately to act. I did allow in thee
 That lawful sorrow that was fit; but let
 Well-grounded comforts cure thee: nought extreme
 Is safe in man.

EUG. 'Tis time must work that cure.

THEO. But why thy pardon is not yet obtain'd,
 Let me be free in my conjectures to thee.

EUG. Speak, friend, as to thyself.

THEO. Sir Argent Scrape,
 Your old rich kinsman, who to-morrow morning
 Is to be married to the Lady Covet—

EUG. Is that match come about? O avarice!
 What monsters thou begett'st in this vile age!

THEO. Sir Argent Scrape, I say, is next heir male,
 On whom thy whole estate was long ago
 Entail'd.

EUG. 'Tis true.

THEO. He must inherit it,
 Should thy life fail.

EUG. 'Tis granted.

THEO. Then, friend, hear
 What not a bare conjecture, but strong grounds
 Move me to utter. Think upon that word
 Thou spok'st so lately: think what avarice
 Can make her bondmen do—that such a price
 As fifteen hundred pounds a year will make Him labour, not thy pardon, but thy death.

EUG. Can there be such a miscreant in nature?

THEO. I should not think so, if I weigh'd him only,
 As he's thy kinsman. I have been inform'd
 He labours underhand to apprehend thee
 Just at the assizes now, and has laid plots
 To stop all pardons, which in that short time

Might be procur'd : and then what bribes may do
 In hastening execution, do but consider.
 If this be false, some courtiers have abus'd
 His fame : and pardon me, my dearest friend,
 If I suspect the worst for fear of thee.

EUG. When I consider what accurs'd effects
 Proceed from wretched avarice, I begin
 To feel a fear.

THEO. This very age hath given Horrid examples lately : brothers have been Betray'd by brothers in that very kind.
 When pardons have been got by the next heirs,
 They have arriv'd too late. No tie so near,
 No band so sacred, but the cursed hunger
 Of gold has broke it, and made wretched men
 To fly from nature, mock religion,
 And trample under feet the holiest laws.

EUG. He has been ever noted for that vice.
 Which, with his age, has still grown stronger in
 him.

THEO. Ah, Eugeny ! how happy were that last
 Age of a man, when long experience
 Has taught him knowledge, taught him temperance,
 And freed him from so many loose desires
 In which rashi youth is plung'd, were not this vice —

But hark, hark, friend ! what ravishing sound is that ?

EUG. Ha ! wondrous sweet ! 'tis from th' adjoining thicket.

Song.

*This is not the Elysian grove ;
 Nor can I meet my slaughter'd love
 Within these shades. Come, Death, and be
 At last as merciful to me,
 As in my dearest Scudmore's fall,
 Thou show'dst thyself tyrannical.*

*Then did I die when he was slain ;
But kill me now, I live again,
And shall go meet him in a grove
Fairer than any here above.*

*O, let this woful breath expire !
Why should I wish Evadne's fire,
Sad Portia's coals, or Lucrece' knife,
To rid me of a loathed life ?
'Tis shame enough that grief alone
Kills me not now, when thou art gone !
But, life, since thou art slow to go,
I'll punish thee for lasting so ;
And make thee piecemeal every day
Dissolve to tears, and melt away.*

THEO. Ah, Eugeny ! some heavenly nymph descends

To make thee music in these desert woods,
To quench or feed thy baleful melancholy :
It is so sweet, I could almost believe,
But that 'tis sad, it were an angel's voice.

EUG. What, in the name of miracle, is this ?

THEO. Remove not thou ; I'll make discovery
Within this thicket.

EUG. Ha ! what means thy wonder ?
What dost thou see ?

THEO. I know not how to tell thee :
Now I could wish myself to be all eyes,
As erst all ears. I see a shape as fair,
And as divine, as was the voice it sent ;
But clouded all with sorrow : a fair woman,
If by a name so mortal I may term her.
In such a sorrow sat the Queen of Love,
When in the wood she wail'd Adonis' death,
And from her crystal-dropping eyes did pay
A lover's obsequy.

EUG. Let me come near.

THEO. Sure, black is Cupid's colour: Death and he
Have chang'd their liveries now, as in the fable
They did their quivers once.¹

EUG. Ah, woe is me!

THEO. What means that woe?

EUG. Ah, Theodore! my guilt
Pursues me to the woods! No place can keep
The monuments of my misdeeds away.

THEO. I understand you not.

EUG. It is Matilda,
The slaughter'd Scudmore's love, his virtuous love,
Whose life by me unhappily was spilt.
The sad, melodious ditty, which so late
Did pierce our ravish'd ears, was but the note
Of this fair turtle for her slaughter'd mate;
In which perchance, amidst her woes, she sends
Black curses up against my spotted self.
But I with prayers and blessings will repay Whate'er thou vent'st 'gainst me. O, do not wish

More wretchedness to my distracted soul
Than I already feel! Sad sighs and tears
Are all the satisfaction that is left
For me to make to thy dead love and thee.

THEO. Those lips can vent no curses; 'twould take off

¹ Mr Gifford, in a note on Massinger's "Virgin Martyr," points out an elegy by Secundus as the origin of this pretty fancy, which is thus employed by Fairfax in his translation of Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered"—

"Death hath again exchanged his darts with Love,
And Cupid thus lets borrow'd arrows fly."

The allusion is not to be found in the original Italian (bk. ii. s. 34). Davenant, in bk. ii. c. 7, of his "Gondibert," also mentions the fable, and it would be easy among foreign writers to point out many instances in which more extensive use has been made of it. The sonnets by Anuibile Nozzolini and by Girolamo Pompei are well known.—Collier.

Much from the sweetness of her virtuous sorrow.
Where lives this lovely maid ?

EUG. In the next village.

THEO. Has she a father living ?

EUG. No, friend ; he died

When she was in her infancy. Her mother
Two years ago deceas'd, and left her all
The substance that she had ; which was not great,
But does maintain her. In that little house,
E'er since this fatal accident, she lives
A miracle of truth and constancy,
Wailing her love ; and now, it seems, has¹ come
To vent her woful passions to the woods.

THEO. How happy had he been in such a love,
If fate had spar'd his life ! But he is dead,
And time at last may wear this sorrow off,
And make her relish the true joys of love.

But why do I thus wander in my thoughts ?
This passion must be curb'd in the beginning ;
'Twill prove too stubborn for me, if it grow. [Aside.]

EUG. Come, let us to my cave, as we intended,
Ere this sad object stay'd us.

THEO. Sad indeed !

Believe me, friend, I suffer with thee in it ;
But we were wounded in two different kinds.

Come, let's be gone ; though—I could still—^[Aside.] dwell here. ^[Exeunt.]

Enter MATILDA.

MAT. Methought I heard a noise within the wood ;
As if men talk'd together not far off ;
But could discover none. The time has been,²

¹ [Old copy, was.]

² So in "Macbeth," act v. sc. 5—

"I have almost forgot the taste of fears :

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd

In such a solitary place as this,
 I should have trembled at each moving leaf ;
 But sorrow and my miserable state
 Have made me bold. If there be savages
 That live by rapine in such woods as these,
 As I have heard in ancient times there were,
 My wretched state would move their pity rather Than violence. I'll confidently go, Guarded with nothing but my innocence. [Exit.

Enter FRUITFUL, TRUSTY.

FRUIT. Come, master steward, you have had a time
 Of sweating for this wedding.

TRUSTY. I have ta'en
 A little pains to-day : yours, Master Fruitful,
 Is yet to come ; I mean your sermon.

FRUIT. Yes, but the pains are pass'd ; and that's the study.
 But to our business that more concerns us :
 Is the deed ready-written that my lady
 Must seal to-day ?

TRUSTY. Do you believe she'll seal it ?

FRUIT. I warrant you ; I have so followed her,
 And laid it to her conscience, that I dare
 Hazard my life 'tis done.

TRUSTY. Well, here's the deed : 'tis plainly written.

FRUIT. I'll peruse't anon.
 I know the other feoffees are as true
 And honest men as any are i' th' world.

[Exit TRUSTY.]

To hear a night-shriek ; and my fell of hair
 Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
 As life were in't. I have supt full with horrors !
 Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
 Cannot once start me."

[And see note to the "Heir," xi. 449.]

Enter FREEMAN, EUPHUES, BARNET, DOTTEREL,
LADY WHIMSEY.

FREE. Save you, Master Fruitful!

FRUIT. Worthy Master Freeman!

FREE. How does my lady, sir? I have made bold

To bring her company.

FRUIT. Please you draw near, sir;

I will go up and signify unto my lady

That you are here.

[Exit FRUITFUL.

BAR. What's he? her chaplain, Euphues?

EUPH. O yes.

LADY W. She uses praying then, it seems?

EUPH. Yes, madam, and fasting too, but gives no alms.

LADY W. Cannot he teach her that?

EUPH. 'Tis to be doubted:

But he has other ways, which are far safer—

To speak against the fashion, against painting,

Or fornication. If he were your chaplain,

He would inveigh as much 'gainst covetousness.

LADY W. He would hurt me little in that.

But has he learning?

EUPH. No, surely, madam; he is full of knowledge,

But has no learning at all: he can expound,

But understands nothing. One thing in him

Is excellent: though he do hate the bishops,

He would not make them guilty of one sin,

Which was to give him orders; for he hates

Orders as much as them.

FREE. Well, I have heard,

Though he came lately to her, he has got

A great hand over her, and sways her conscience

Which way he list.

EUPH. Uncle, 'tis very easy

To rule a thing so weak as is her conscience.

I'll undertake, that a twin'd thread would do it
As well as a strong cable. If he could Rule her estate too, he would have a place on't.

FREE. Why, that will follow t'other.

EUPH. I think not ;

Rather her conscience follows her estate,
Oppression had not else increas'd it so.
She wrong'd a worthy friend of mine—young Scudmore,

And by mere fraud and bribery took away
His whole estate, five hundred pound a year.

FREE. I must confess, 'twas a foul cause indeed ;
And he, poor man, lack'd means to prosecute
The cause against her. But he feels it not
At this time, nephew.

BAR. Was't that Scudmore, sir,
Whom Eugeny, Sir Argent Scrape's young kinsman, Unfortunately kill'd ?

FREE. The same. Well, let
All these things pass : we come now to be merry.

LADY W. Let's eat up her good cheer : a niggard's feast
Is best, they say.

DOT. Shall we have wine good store ?

BAR. O, fear not that.

DOT. Hold, belly, hold, i' faith !

BAR. Yes, and brain too.

DOT. Nay, for my brain,
Let me alone, I fear not that : no wine
Can hurt my brain.

LADY W. Say you so, Master Dotterel ?
Why, such a brain I love.

DOT. Madam, I am glad
I had it for you.

LADY W. For me, sir ?

DOT. Yes, lady,
'Tis at your service ; so is the whole body.
Did I not tickle her there, old lad ?

BAR. Yes, rarely.

LADY W. Shall I presume to call you servant, then ?

DOT. O Lord, madam ! if I were worthy to be.

LADY W. Nay, I know you have good courtship, servant.

Wear this for my sake. [Gives him a scarf.]

DOT. 'Tis your livery, madam.

BAR. Well, th'art a happy man, if thou knew'st all.

EUPH. Madam, I see your ladyship can tell how to make choice in dealing of your favours.

DOT. It pleases you to say so, good Master Euphues.

EUPH. Why, sir, I speak of the lady's judgment.

DOT. 'Twas more of her courtesy than my desert.

Enter LADY COVET on crutches.

EUPH. Here comes the lady bride.

FREE. Joy to your ladyship !

LADY C. I thank you, sir : y' are very welcome all.

FREE. I have made bold to bring my friends along,

As you commanded, lady.

LADY C. They are most welcome.

EUPH. Methinks your ladyship looks fresh to-day,

And like a bride indeed.

LADY C. Ah, Master Euphues !

You, I perceive, can flatter.

EUPH. Does your glass

Tell you I flatter, madam ?

LADY C. Bestow this

Upon young maids ; but let me tell you, sir, Old folks may marry too. It was ordain'd

At first to be as well a stay to age
As to please youth. We have our comforts too,
Though we be old.

EUPH. Madam, I doubt it not :
You are not yet so old but you may have
Your comfort well ; and if Sir Argent Scrape Were but one threescore years younger than he is——

BAR. What a strange but thou mak'st !

EUPH. You would perceive it.

LADY W. Servant, could you find in your heart to marry
Such an old bride ?

DOT. No, mistress, I protest
I had rather have none.

LADY W. What age would you desire
To choose your wife of ?

DOT. Just as old as you are.

LADY W. Well, servant, I believe you can dissemble.

LADY C. Will't please you to draw near ? Sir
Argent stays Expecting within.

FREE. We'll wait upon you. [Exeunt.

Manent BARNET, DOTTEREL.

BAR. To what strange fortune, friend, are some men born,
I mean by thee. Surely, when thou wert young,
The fairies dandled thee.

DOT. Why, prythee, Barnet ?

BAR. That ladies thus should doat upon thy person.

Dost thou not see how soon the Lady Whimsey
Is caught in love with thee ?

DOT. But is she, think'st thou ?

BAR. Is she! Come, thou perceiv'st it well enough;

What else should make her court thee, and bestow
Her favours openly? And such a lady!
So full of wit as she is, too! Would she Betray the secrets of her heart so far,
But that love plays the tyrant in her breast,
And forces her?

DOT. True, and, as thou say'st, Barnet,
She's a brave, witty lady; and I love
A wit with all my heart. What would she say
If she should know me truly, that thus loves,
And thinks I am but a poor younger brother?

BAR. Why, still the greater is thy happiness:
Thou may'st be sure she loves thee truly now,
And not thy fortunes.

DOT. Has she found me out,
For all I sought to hide myself?

BAR. The more
Thy worth appears, the more her judgment's seen.
O, 'tis a gallant lady! Well, she might Have cast her eye on me or Euphues;
But 'twas not our good fortune!

DOT. Do not despair;
Some other woman may love thee as well:
Come, thou hast worth, Barnet, as well as I.

BAR. Nay, nay, abuse not your poor friends;
but tell me,
What dost thou think of young Artemia now?

DOT. Of her! a foolish girl, a simple thing!
She'd make a pretty wife for me! I confess
I courted her; but she had not the wit
To find out what I was, for all my talk.

BAR. And that was strange she should not; but 'tis fate
That governs marriages.

DOT. Let her repent,
And know what she hath lost, when 'tis too late.

But dost thou think this gallant Lady Whimsey
Will marry me?

BAR. Mak'st thou a doubt of that?

'Tis thy own fault, boy, if thou hast her not.

DOT. That I protest it shall not be; but, tell me,
Shall I express my love to her in verse
Or prose?

BAR. In which you will.

DOT. I am alike at both of them indeed.

BAR. I know thou art.

DOT. Come, let's go in.

BAR. Thou long'st to see thy mistress?

DOT. We'll drink her health in a crown'd cup,¹ my lad. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

[EARTHWORM'S house.]

THEODORE, NEIGHBOURS with sacks.

THEO. Come, neighbours, pray draw near; my fellow Jasper
Has told you wherefore you were sent for hither.

1ST NEIGH. Ay, I thank you, friend.

2D NEIGH. And my good master too.

THEO. My master, touch'd with sorrow and remorse

¹ I suppose he means a bumper, a cup filled till the wine rises above the top of it. Such a character as Dotterel is hardly made to allude to the pocula coronata of the Romans.—Steevens.

A crowned cup was not an unusual expression for a bumper: thus, in "All Fools," Fortunio says—

"True, and to welcome Dariotto's lateness
He shall (unpledg'd) carouse one crowned cup
To all these ladies' health."

Dotterel might therefore very properly employ words in ordinary use, without supposing him acquainted with "the pocula coronata of the Romans."—Collier.

For that unhappy error of his life—
 That fault (alas!) which by too true a name
 Is termed misery, determines now
 By deeds of tender charity to make
 The wronged poor amends, and to the world
 Declare the fruits of a reformed life.
 And first your pardon, neighbours, he would beg,
 And, next to heaven, be reconcil'd to you.

1ST NEIGH. Now blessing on his heart!

2D NEIGH. Good tender soul!

3D NEIGH. I ever thought him a right honest man.

THEO. He that before did churlishly engross
 And lock those blessings up, which from the hand
 Of heaven were shower'd upon him, has at last Found their true use, and will henceforth redeem
 The former misspent time. His wealthy stores
 Shall be no longer shut against the poor;
 His bags seal'd up no longer, to debar
 The course of fitting bounty. To you all,
 Of corn and money, weekly he'll allow
 In recompense a greater quantity
 By far than men of greater rank shall do:
 Nor will he come himself to take your thanks,
 Till, as he says, he has deserv'd them better.
 Meantime, by me he pours his bounty forth,
 Which he desires with greatest secrecy
 May be perform'd; for all vainglorious shows
 And ostentation does his soul abhor.
 He sounds no trumpet to bestow his alms;
 Nor in the streets proclaims his charity,
 Which makes the virtue vice; nor would he have
 The world take notice of you at his doors.

1ST NEIGH. See, see, religious man!

2D NEIGH. Ah, neighbour!

Some in the world have been mistaken in him.

THEO. Nor would he have you blaze his bounty forth,

And praise him openly : forbear it, neighbours ;
 Your private prayers only he desires
 And hearty wishes ; for true charity,
 Though ne'er so secret, finds a just reward.
 I am his servant, newly entertain'd,
 But one to whom he does commit the trust
 Of his desires in this ; and I should wrong
 His goodness strangely, if I should keep
 The least of what his bounty doth intend.
 Come in with me ; I'll fill your sacks with corn,
 And let you see what money he bestows.

OMNES NEIGH. We'll pray to heaven to reward his goodness. [Exeunt.

EUPHUES, BARNET.

EUPH. Our Dotterel, then, is caught ?

BAR. He is, and just

As Dotterels¹ used to be : the lady first Advanc'd toward him, stretch'd forth her wing,
 and he

Met her with all expressions ; and he's caught
 As fast in her lime-twigs as he can be,
 Until the church confirm it.

EUPH. There will be Another brave estate for her to spend.

BAR. Others will be the better for't ; and if None but a Dotterel suffer for't, what loss
 Of his can countervail the least good fortune
 That may from thence blow to another man ?

EUPH. She spent her t'other husband a great fortune.

BAR. Dotterel's estate will find her work again
 For a great while : two thousand pounds a year
 Cannot be melted suddenly ; when 'tis,
 Men can but say her prodigality

¹ [Compare vol. iv. p. 68.]

Has done an act of justice, and translated
That wealth, which fortune's blindness had mis-plac'd

On such a fellow. What should he do with it ?

EUPH. And thou say'st right : some men¹ were made to be

The conduit-pipes of an estate, or rather
The sieves of fortune, through whose leaking holes
She means to scatter a large flood of wealth,
Besprinkling many with refreshing showers.

So usurers, so dying aldermen

Pour out at once upon their sieve-like heirs Whole gusts of envi'd wealth ; which they together

Through many holes let out again in showers,
And with their ruin water a whole country.

But will it surely be a match ?

BAR. As sure

As the two old death's-heads to-morrow morning
Are to be join'd together.

EUPH. Who, Sir Argent and his lady ?

BAR. Yes, if she keep touch

In what she promis'd me, I'll undertake
Her Dotterel shall be sure, and given to her
In matrimony.

EUPH. Given to his wife ?

I see thou mean'st in Dotterel to bring back
The ancient Spanish custom, where the women
Inherited the land, rul'd the estates ;
The men were given in marriage to the women

¹ So Pope—

“ Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor ;
This year a reservoir to keep and spare ;
The next, a fountain, spouting through his heir,
In lavish streams to quench a country's thirst,
And men and dogs shall drink him till they burst.”

—“ Moral Essays,” Ep. iii. l. 170.

With portions, and had jointures made to them :
 Just so will be his case ; he will be married Unto a brave subjection. How the fool
 Is caught in his own noose ! What confidence
 Had he, that he would never marry any,
 But such, forsooth, as must first fall in love
 With him, not knowing of his wealth at all ?

BAR. Well, now he's fitted : he begun at first With fair Artemia.

EUPH. He might have told
 Her of his wealth, and miss'd her too, or else
 I am deceiv'd in her : true virtuous love
 Cannot be bought so basely ; she besides
 Has been in love, I'm sure ; and may be still, Though he be fled the land. But, now I think
 on't,

I must go see whether old Earthworm's son
 Has yet perform'd what she desir'd : she stays
 At home.

BAR. I'll in, and see how Dotterel
 Courts his brave mistress : I left him composing A sonnet to her. There are the old couple Within too.

EUPH. If a man could get to hear
 Their way of courting, 'twould be full as strange
 As Dotterel's is ridiculous : but stay,

SIR ARGENT SCRAPE and LADY COVET brought in in chairs.

Here come the lovely bride and bridegroom forth.
 Prythee, let's venture to stay here a little Behind the hangings, man : we shall be sure
 To hear their love ; they are both somewhat deaf,
 And must speak loud.

BAR. Content, I'll stay with thee.

SIR ARG. Leave us awhile. Now, madam, you have seen,

So have your learned counsel, that I deal
 Squarely with you : my personal estate
 Is no less worth than I profess'd, when first
 I mov'd my loving suit.

BAR. Ay, marry, sir, a loving suit indeed!

[Aside.]

EUPH. Let 'em go on in their own proper dialect.

[Aside.]

LADY C. I find it ;

And should be loth but to requite your truth
 In the same kind : you seem'd at first to question,
 How strong my title was in that estate
 Which was young Scudmore's once : 'tis a fair manor.

EUPH. 'Tis true, old rottenness—too good for you.

[Aside.]

LADY C. My counsel can inform you that I kept
 it,

And did enjoy possession while he liv'd ;
 And now he's dead, who should recover it ?
 The heirs are poor and beggarly.

SIR ARG. Nay, I think

We need not fear their suing against us.

LADY C. If they should stir, a little piece of money

Would stop their mouths.

EUPH. A little piece of dirt

Will stop your mouth ere long, and then the suit
 Will go against thee, mischief!

[Aside.]

BAR. Prythee, peace ;

Thou art not merry now, but choleric.

[Aside.]

EUPH. I think of my wrong'd friend.

[Aside.]

LADY C. But you were saying

You made no doubt but shortly to enjoy
 Your kinsman Eugeny's estate : that were
 A fair addition to your land ; they say
 It goes at fifteen hundred pounds a year.

SIR ARG. 'Tis true, and 'tis well worth it.

LADY C. But what hopes have you to gain it shortly?

SIR ARG. He, you know,
By Scudmore's death has forfeited his life
Unto the law; and the estate's entail'd
On me as the next heir.

LADY C. But he is fled.

SIR ARG. No, no; I know he lurks not far from
hence,
And I shall shortly learn the very place
By some intelligence. I have provided
My secret scouts; and then you know th' assizes
Are now at hand: the time will be too short
To get a pardon, specially as I
Have laid some friends to stall it underhand.

EUPH. Here's a new mischief, Barnet! [Aside.]

BAR. And a strange one. [Aside.]

LADY C. And then you must not spare a little money
To hasten execution at an hour
Unusual. Those things may well be done:
Else what were money good for?

SIR ARG. You say right.
If 'twere once come to that, I fear it not.

LADY C. Well, sir, I see all's right and straight between us.
You understand how welcome you are hither;
I need not tell it o'er again.

SIR ARG. No, lady;
I will be bold to say, I do not come
Now as a stranger, but to take possession
Both of your house and you.

EUPH. He cannot speak
Out of that thriving language in his love. [Aside.]

LADY C. Will you go in again? our guests, perhaps,
Think the time long.

SIR ARG. With all my heart:
A cup of sack would not do much amiss.

LADY C. We'll have it with a toast. Who's near there, ho!

Enter SERVANTS, and carry them out.

BAR. What a strange kind of pageant have we seen?

EUPH. Barnet, I cannot tell whether such strange Unsatiabie desires, in these old folks, That are half earth already, should be thought More impious or more ridiculous.

BAR. They are both alike.

EUPH. But such a monstrous Unnatural plot as his, to apprehend His kinsman, I ne'er heard of! If I knew Where Eugeny remain'd, though 'twere his fortune To kill a friend of mine, I'd rescue him From this unnatural and wolfish man.

BAR. That would betray his life to satisfy His avarice, not justice of the law.

Enter DOTTEREL, LADY WHIMSEY.

Here comes another piece of matrimony, That may be shortly.

EUPH. 'Tis better far than t'other: They are the last couple in hell.

DOT. Save you, gallants!

BAR. You are the gallant, sir, that on your arm Do wear the trophies of a conquer'd lady.

EUPH. Madam, I had almost mistaken my salutation, And bid God give you joy.

LADY W. Of what, I prythee?

EUPH. Of this young gallant, call him by what name Or title you are pleas'd, husband or servant.

BAR. He may be both, sir: he is not the first
Has been a husband and a servant too.

DOT. I am her servant, sir: and I confess
Have an ambition, and so forth.

LADY W. How now, servant!

EUPH. I tell you truly, madam, 'tis reported
(And those reports are fatal still, you know)
That Master Dotterel and you are purpos'd
To bear the old knight and lady company
To-morrow to the church.

LADY W. That I confess, and so will you, I think.

EUPH. Nay, but to do
As they do, madam—tie the lasting knot.

LADY W. Do you hear, servant? This it is to have
So proper a servant: every one supposes
I must needs be in love.

DOT. I would you were
As deep in Cupid's books as I.

EUPH. That is
In Cupid's favour: you are a happy man.

LADY W. My servant has been searching Cupid's books,

I think, to find that sonnet that he gave me.
Are you content that I should show your poetry?

DOT. Do, mistress, I am not asham'd on't;
But you shall give me leave to read it to 'em.
'Tis but a sonnet, gentlemen, that I fitted
To my fair mistress here.

EUPH. Let us be happy
To hear it, sir.

DOT. Take it as it is— [He reads.]

*Dear, do not your fair beauty wrong;
In thinking still you are too young.*

EUPH. How! too young?

BAR. Let him alone; I know the song.

DOT. *The rose and lilies in your cheek
Flourish, and no more ripeness seek ;
Your cherry lip, red, soft and sweet,
Proclaims such fruit for taste most meet :
Then lose no time, for love has wings,
And flies away from aged things.*

How do you like it, gentlemen ?

EUPH. Very well. The song's a good one.

BAR. O, monstrous !

Never man stole with so little judgment.

EUPH. Of all the love-songs that were ever made,

He could not have chose out one more unfit,
More palpably unfit, that must betray
His most ridiculous theft.

LADY W. Who would have thought
My servant should suppose I think myself
Too young to love, that have already had One husband !

EUPH. O, excuse him, gentle madam,
He found it in the song.

BAR. And, it should seem,
He could get no other song but this.

LADY W. Surely a woman of five-and-thirty year old
Is not too young to love !

BAR. O, spare him, madam !

EUPH. Let's raise him up. I think the sonnet's good :

There's somewhat in't to th' purpose. Read it again.

[He reads it again.]

EUPH. ———For taste most meet.

Very good ; and there he tickled it ?
Mark'd you that, madam ! The two last of all ?
Then lose no time, for love hath wings—
He gives you fitting counsel.

LADY W. Yes, I like it.

DOT. I thought, when they understood it, they would like it :

I am sure, I have heard this song prais'd ere now.

LADY W. This does deserve a double favour, servant.

DOT. Let this be the favour, sweet mistress.

[Kisses her.]

EUPH. How some men's poetry happens to be rewarded !

LADY W. Shall we go in? But, prythee, Euphues,

What is the reason sweet Artemia, Thy cousin, is not here ?

EUPH. I know not, madam ;
But her pretence was business. I am going To visit her. If you go in to keep
Th' old couple company, I'll fetch her to you.

LADY W. I prythee, do ! Farewell. Come, servant, Shall we go in ?

DOT. I'll wait upon you, mistress. [Exeunt.]

THEODORE, ARTEMIA.

THEO. I will acquaint him, lady, with the hour,
And to his longing ear deliver all
Your sweet salutes ; which is the only air
Of life and comfort Eugeny takes in.
Your constant love and virtues, sweetest lady,
Are those preservatives, which from his heart
Expel the killing fits of melancholy,
And do, in spite of fortune, quicken him.

ART. O, would those comforts could arrive at him,

That from my wishing thoughts are hourly sent !

THEO. Such virtuous wishes seldom are in vain.

ART. I should be far more sad in the behalf
Of my dear Eugeny, but that I know

He does enjoy your sweet society,
Which he beyond all value does esteem.

THEO. His own is recompense enough for mine.

And I the gainer in it; did not grief
For his misfortune stain that perfect joy,
Which I could take in his dear company.

ART. If I should speak, sir, how he values you,
I should too much oppress your modesty.

THEO. Our friendship, fairest lady, is more old,

And he more true, than that his heart so long
Should be unknown to me. I'll not be long,
Before I visit him to let him know,
What hour shall make him happy in your sight.
My longer stay, sweet lady, might be more
Observ'd and pry'd into: let me be bold
To leave you now, but be your servant ever.

ART. All happiness attend you, worthy sir.

[Exit THEODORE.]

Would I myself might go as well as send,
And see that seeming solitary place,
That place of woe. Sure, it would be to me
No desert wood, while Eugeny were there,
But a delightful palace. Here at home,
The more that company comes in, the more
I am alone, methinks. Wanting that object
On which my heart is fix'd, I cannot be Possess'd of anything. Nothing can be
My comfort but a hope that these sad clouds
Of our misfortunes will at last blow over.
But mischief's like a cockatrice's eyes—
Sees first and kills, or is seen first and dies.

Enter EUPHUES.

EUPH. How dost thou, coz? I wrote a letter for thee

To Earthworm's son : has the young ten-i'-th'-hundred

Been here ?

ART. I thank you, cousin ; the gentleman
Was with me, and but newly parted hence.

EUPH. H' has got a title then by coming hither :
But he may be a gentleman ; his wealth
Will make it good.

ART. His virtues make it good :
Believe it, cousin, there's a wealthy mind
Within that plain outside.

EUPH. How's this ?
Have your quick eyes found out his worth already ?

ART. They must be blind that cannot, when they know him.

Well, cousin, you may laugh at me.

EUPH. By no means ;
I know your judgment's good.

ART. As good as 'tis,
It must content a woman. When you know him,
You'll find a man that may deserve your friendship,
And far above all slighting.

EUPH. I am sorry
I came not soon enough : but prythee, cousin,
What are the ways have taken thee so soon ?

ART. What taking do you mean ? You promis'd
me

You would not ask the cause I sent for him,
Though you shall know hereafter. But I hope
You do not think I am in love with him ?

EUPH. I'll look upon the man, and then resolve
you.

ART. Well, do ; perhaps you'll know him better, then :

He knows you well.

EUPH. Me ! Has he told you how ?

ART. Did you ne'er meet one Theodore at Venice ?

EUPH. Can this be he ?

ART. Yes, very well ; although
He be old Earthworm's son, and make no shew
At home.

EUPH. And have you found out so much worth
In him already ?

ART. How do you esteem him ?
We women well may err.

EUPH. I smell a rat ;
And, if my brain fail not, have found out all
Your drifts, though ne'er so politicly carri'd.

ART. I know your brain, cousin, is very good ;
But it may fail.

EUPH. It comes into my head
What old Sir Argent Scrape told to his lady.
His kinsman Eugeny lurk'd hereabouts :
He was her sweetheart once, and may be still ;
I think she's constant, though she keep it close.
This Theodore and he were fam'd for friendship.

[Aside.]

I have collected, cousin, and have at you ?

ART. Let's hear it, pray.

EUPH. You shall. This Theodore
I do confess a most deserving man ;
And so perchance your lover Eugeny
Has told you, cousin. Ha ! do you begin
To blush already ? I am sure those two
Were most entirely friends ; and I am sorry
To hear what I have heard to-day, concerning Young Eugeny.

ART. What, prythee, cousin ? Tell me.

EUPH. Now you are mov'd ; but I may err, you know.

ART. Good cousin, tell me what.

EUPH. Nay, I believe

I shall worse startle you, though you would make Such fools as I believe he is in France.

Yes, yes, it may be so ; and then, you know,
He's safe enough.

ART. O cousin, I'll confess .
What you would have me do ; but tell me this.

EUPH. Nay, now I will not thank you ; I have found it :

And though you dealt in riddles so with me,
I'll plainly tell you all, and teach you how
You may perchance prevent your lover's danger.

ART. O, I shall ever love you.

EUPH. Well, come in ;
I'll tell you all, and by what means I knew it.

ACT IV.

EARTHWORM, JASPER.

EARTH. Out, villain ! how could any fire come there
But by thy negligence ? I do not use
To keep such fires as should at all endanger
My house, much less my barn.

JAS. I know not, sir ;
But there I'm sure it was, and still continues,
Though without danger now ; for the poor people,
Ere this, have quench'd it.

EARTH. There my wonder lies.
Why should the people come to quench my fire ?
Had it been a city, where one house
Might have endanger'd all, it justly then
Might have engag'd the people's utmost aid,
And I ne'er bound to give them thanks at all ;
But my house stands alone, and could endanger
No other building. Why should all the people
Come running hither so to quench the fire ?
They love not me.

JAS. Sure, sir, I cannot tell ;
Perhaps the people knew not what to do,
And might be glad to see a sight.

EARTH. Methought,
 As I came by, I saw them wondrous busy ;
 Nay, more—methought I heard them pray for me,
 As if they lov'd me. Why should they do so ?
 I ne'er deserv'd it at the people's hands.
 Go, Jasper, tell me whether it be quench'd,
 And all secure : I long to hear the news.

Enter THEODORE.

THEO. I come to bring you happy tidings, sir.
 The fire is quench'd, and little hurt is done.

EARTH. That's well, my son.

THEO. But, sir, if you had seen
 How the poor people labour'd to effect it,
 And (like so many salamanders) rush'd
 Into the fire, scorching their clothes and beards,
 You would have wonder'd justly, and have thought
 That each man toil'd to save his father's house
 Or his own dear estate ; but I conceive
 'Twas nothing but an honest charity,
 That wrought it in them.

EARTH. Ha ! a charity !

Why should that charity be show'd to me ?

THEO. If I mistake not strangely, he begins
 To apprehend it.

EARTH. As I came along,
 I heard them pray for me ; but those good prayers
 Can never pierce the skies in my behalf,
 But will return again, and ever lodge
 Within those honest breasts, that sent them forth.

THEO. Surely it works.

EARTH. O ! all the world but I are honest men !
[He weeps.]

THEO. What is't that troubles you ?
 Your goods are safe ; there's nothing lost at all.
 You should rejoice, methinks. You might have suffer'd
 A wondrous loss in your estate !

EARTH. Ah, son !
'Tis not the thought of what I might have lost,
That draws these tears from me.

THEO. Does he not weep,
Or do my flattering hopes deceive my sight ?
He weeps, and fully too ; large show'rs of tears
Bedew his aged cheeks. O happy sorrow,
That makes me weep for joy ! Never did son
So justly glory in a father's tears. [Aside.
Sir, you are sad, methinks.

EARTH. No sadness, son,
Can be enough to expiate the crimes
That my accursed avarice has wrought.
Where are the poor ?

THEO. Why, sir, what would you do ?¹

EARTH. Ask me not, Theodore. Alas, I fear
Thou art too much my son : my bad example
Has done thee much more harm than all the large Increase of treasure I shall leave behind Can recompence. But leave those wretched thoughts,

And let me teach thee a new lesson now :
But thou art learned, Theodore, and soon
Wilt find the reasons of it.

THEO. Do you please
To speak it, sir, and I will strive to frame
Myself to follow.

EARTH. Where are all the poor ?
Jasper, go call them in. Now, prythee, learn
(For this late accident may truly teach
A man what value he should set on wealth)
Fire may consume my houses ; thieves may steal
My plate and jewels ; all my merchandise
Is at the mercy of the winds and seas ;

¹[A MS. note in one of the former edits. says : "This sudden and total change, unnatural as it is, is one of the characteristics of the old plays."]

And nothing can be truly term'd mine own,
 But what I make mine own by using well.
 Those deeds of charity which we have done,
 Shall stay for ever with us ; and that wealth
 Which we have so bestow'd, we only keep :
 The other is not ours.

THEO. Sir, you have taught me
 Not to give anything at all away.

EARTH. When I was blind, my son, and did miscall

My sordid vice of avarice true thrift :
 But now forget that lesson ; I prythee, do.
 That cosening vice, although it seem to keep
 Our wealth, debars us from possessing it,
 And makes us more than poor.

THEO. How far beyond
 All hope my happy project works upon him !

Enter NEIGHBOURS.

EARTH. Y' are welcome, neighbours ; welcome . heartily !

I thank you all, and will hereafter study
 To recompence your undeserved love.
 My house shall stand more open to the poor,
 More hospitable, and my wealth more free
 To feed and clothe the naked hungry souls.
 I will redeem the ill that I have done
 (If heaven be pleas'd to spare my life awhile)
 With true unfeigned deeds of charity.

1ST NEIGH. We thank your worship.

2D NEIGH. We know full well
 Your worship has a good heart toward us.

EARTH. Alas ! you do not know it ; but have had

Too sad a cause to know the contrary.
 Pray do not thank me, till you truly find
 How much my heart is chang'd from what it was ;

Till you, by real and substantial deeds,
 Shall see my penitence, and be fully taught
 How to forget or pardon all the errors
 Of that my former miserable life.
 Jasper, go in with them ; show them the way
 Into my house.

JAS. I think I had need to show 'em ;
 No poor folks heretofore have us'd this way.

EARTH. And I'll come to you, neighbours, presently.

1ST NEIGH. Long may you live.

2D NEIGH. All happiness betide you.

3D NEIGH. And a reward fourfold in th' other world.

EARTH. How dost thou like this music, Theodore ?

I mean, the hearty prayers of the poor,
 Whose curses pierce more than two-edged swords.
 What comfort like to this can riches give ?
 What joy can be so great, as to be able
 To feed the hungry, clothe the naked man ?

THEO. Now, sir, you think aright ; for to bestow
 Is greater pleasure far than to receive.

EARTH. No vice, so much as avarice, deprives
 Our life of sweetest comforts, and debars
 So much the fair society of men.

I taught thee once far otherwise, but now
 Study this last and better lesson, son.

THEO. With more delight than e'er I did the former.

You never yet knew scholar covetous.

EARTH. And now I think on't, Theodore, I have
 A niece, the daughter of my only sister ;
 Her mother died a widow two years since.
 How she has left her orphan daughter there,
 I do not know ; if she have left her ill,
 I'll be a father to her. Prythee, go
 Inquire her out, and bring her to my house,

How well soe'er the world may go with her.
 Bounty's a spice of virtue. Whoso can,
 And won't, relieve the poor, he is no man.

THEO. Where lives she, sir ?

EARTH. 'Tis not a mile from hence,
 In the next village. Thou ne'er saw'st her yet ;
 But fame has spoke her for a virtuous maid.
 Young Scudmore, while he liv'd, and was possess'd
 Of his estate, thought to have married her ;
 Whose death, they say, she takes most heavily,
 And with a wond'rous constant sorrow mourns.

THEO. Sure, 'tis the same fair maid. [Aside.]

EARTH. Her name's Matilda.

THEO. The very same ! [Aside.] I can inquire her out ;

And, if you please, will presently about it.

EARTH. Do, while I my neighbours visit. He doth live

Mighty that hath the pow'r and will to give.

[Exit.]

THEO. This is the same fair nightingale that tun'd

Her sweet sad accents lately to the woods,
 And did so far enthrall my heart : but that Fond love is vanish'd. Like a kinsman now
 I'll comfort her, and love her virtuous soul.
 O, what a blessed change this day has wrought
 In my old father's heart ! You pow'rs, that gave Those thoughts, continue them ! This day will I Still celebrate as my nativity. [Exit.]

LADY COVET, FRUITFUL.

LADY C. But is that lawful, to convey away
 All my estate, before I marry him ?

FRUIT. 'Tis more than lawful, madam : I must Tell you 'tis necessary ; and your ladyship
 Is bound in conscience so to do ; for else
 'Twill be no longer yours, but all is his,

When he has married you. You cannot then
 Dispose of anything to pious uses ;
 You cannot show your charity at all,
 But must be govern'd by Sir Argent Scrape :
 And can you tell how he'll dispose of it ?

LADY C. 'Tis true : perchance he'll take my money all,
 And purchase for himself, to give away
 To his own name, and put me, while I live,
 To a poor stipend.

FRUIT. There you think aright.
 You can relieve no friends ; you can bequeath
 Nothing at all, if he survive you, madam,
 As 'tis his hope he shall.

LADY C. That hope may fail him.
 I am not yet so weak, but I may hop
 Over his grave.

FRUIT. That is not in our knowledge.
 But if you do survive him, as I hope,
 Madam, you will, there is no law at all
 Can bar you of your thirds in all his land,
 And you besides are mistress of your own.
 And all the charitable deeds, which you
 After your death shall do, as building schools
 Or hospitals, shall go in your own name ;
 Which otherwise Sir Argent Scrape would have,

And with your riches build himself a fame.

LADY C. I grant 'tis true : but will it not seem strange
 That I should serve him so ?

FRUIT. Strange, madam ! no ;
 Nothing is now more usual : all your widows
 Of aldermen, that marry lords of late,
 Make over their estates, and by that means
 Retain a power to curb their lordly husbands.
 When they, to raise the ruins of their houses,
 Do marry so : instead of purchasing

What was expected, they do more engage
Their land in thirds for them.

LADY C. Well, I must trust
The feoffees then : but they are honest men.

FRUIT. You need not fear them ; they are zealous men,

Honest in all their dealings, and well known
In London, madam. Will you seal it now ?

Enter TRUSTY.

LADY C. Yes, have you it ?

FRUIT. 'Tis here : Here's Master Trusty too,
Your steward, madam ; he and I shall be Enough for witnesses.

LADY C. 'Tis true : give me
The seal. So now dispose of it as I

Intended, Master Fruitful. [Seals and delivers.]

FRUIT. I will, madam.

LADY C. Trusty, come you along with me.

[Exeunt.]

Manet FRUITFUL.

FRUIT. Now all our ends are wrought ! this is the thing,
Which I so long have labour'd to effect.
Old covetous lady, I will purge your mind
Of all this wealth, that lay so heavy there,
And by evacuation make a cure
Of that your golden dropsy, whose strange thirst
Could ne'er be satisfi'd with taking in.
You once had wealth—But soft, let me consider !
If she should marry old Sir Argent Scrape,
We could not keep it ; for his money then
Would make a suit against us, and perchance Recover hers again : which to prevent
I will go spoil the marriage presently.
The sight of this will soon forbid the banns,

And stop his love. Then she wants means to sue us.

Be sure to keep thine adversary poor,
If thou wouldst thrive in suits. The way to 'scape
Revenge for one wrong is to do another :
The second injury secures the former.
I'll presently to old Sir Argent Scrape,
And tell him this : he's meditating now,
What strange additions to his large revenue
Are coming at one happy clap ; what heaps
Of wealth to-morrow he shall be possess'd of ;
What purchases to make ; how to dispose
Of her and hers. But soft, the cards must turn :
The man must be deceived, and she much more.
To cosen the deceitful is no fraud. [Exit.

Enter SIR ARGENT SCRAPE.

SIR ARG. Methinks a youthful figure doth possess

My late stiff limbs ; and (like a snake) I feel
A second spring succeed my age of winter.
O gold ! how cordial, how restorative Art thou ! What, though thou canst not give me legs

Nor active hands, alas ! I need them not ;
Possess'd of thee, I can command the legs,
The hands, the tongues, the brains, of other men
To move for me. What need he hands or brains,
That may command the lawyer's subtlety,
The soldier's valour, the best poet's wit,
Or any writer's skill ? O gold ! to thee
The sciences are servants ; the best trades
Are but thy slaves, indeed thy creatures rather :
For thee they were invented, and by thee
Are still maintained. 'Tis thou alone that art
The nerves of war, the cement of the state,
And guide of human actions. 'Tis for thee

Old Argent lives. O, what a golden shower
 Will rain on me to-morrow ! Let me see :
 Her personal estate alone will buy
 Upon good rates a thousand pound a year.
 Where must that lie ? Not in our country here —
 Not all together ; no ; then my revenue
 Will have too great a notice taken of it ;
 I shall be rais'd in subsidies, and 'sess'd
 More to the poor. No, no, that must not be.
 I'll purchase all in parcels, far from home,
 And closely as I can : a piece in Cornwall ;
 In Hampshire some ; some in Northumberland.
 I'll have my factors forth in all those parts,
 To know what prodigals there be abroad,
 What pennyworths may be had : so it shall be.

Enter FRUITFUL.

SIR ARG. Ha ! Master Fruitful ! welcome. How go the squares ?

What do you think of me to make a bridegroom ?
 Do I look young enough ?

FRUIT. Sir, I am come
 To tell you news ; such news as will, perhaps,
 A little trouble you ; but, if your worship
 Should not have known it, 'twould have vex'd you more.

SIR ARG. Vex'd me ! What's that can vex me now ? speak, man.

FRUIT. I thought that I was bound in conscience,
 sir,
 To tell it you : 'tis conscience, and the love
 I bear to truth, makes me reveal it now.

SIR ARG. What is the business ? speak.

FRUIT. Do not suppose
 That I am treacherous to my Lady Covet,
 To whom I do belong, in uttering this.

In such a case I serve not her, but truth,
And hate dishonest dealing.

SIR ARG. Come to th' purpose.

FRUIT. Then thus it is : my Lady Covet, sir,
Merely to cosen you, has pass'd away
Her whole estate ; you shall not get a penny
By marrying her.

SIR ARG. How, man ? is't possible ?

FRUIT. 'Tis very certain, sir ; I, for a need,
Could show you the conveyance ; for my hand
Is as a witness there ; so is her steward's.

SIR ARG. O horrible deceit !

FRUIT. Ask her herself ;
If she deny it, I can justify it ;
So can her steward too.

SIR ARG. You make me mad.

FRUIT. I keep you from being so by a mature Prevention of your cosening.

SIR ARG. O, what hopes

Am I fall'n from ; who would believe these false
Deceitful creatures ?

FRUIT. Sir, I could but wonder,
That she would cheat so honest a gentleman,
That came a suitor to her for pure love.

SIR ARG. Love ! Mischief of love !

FRUIT. Alas, I know
It was not her estate that you sought after,
Your love was honest : and then that she Should cosen you !

SIR ARG. She shall not cosen me :
I'll have my horse-litter made ready straight,
And leave her house.

FRUIT. But when you see her, sir,
It may be your affection will return.
If you should leave her only upon this,
The world would think that you were covetous ;
And covetousness is such a sin, you know.

SIR ARG. You do not mock me, do you ?

FRUIT. Who? I, sir?

I know your worship does abhor the sin
Of covetousness; but I confess indeed
'Twould vex a man to have been cosen'd so.

SIR ARG. Have I liv'd all this while to be o'er-reach'd

And cheated by a woman? I'll forsake her Immediately.

FRUIT. Sir, 'tis a happy thing,
When men can love with such discretion,
As to forsake when they shall see just cause.
Some are so fond in their affections
That, though provok'd by all the injuries
That can be offer'd, they can never leave
The mistress of their hearts.

SIR ARG. I warrant her,
For any such affection in old Argent.

FRUIT. I do believe it, sir; you are too wise.

[Retires.]

Enter LADY COVET.

LADY C. How do you, sir?

SIR ARG. E'en as I may:

You do not mean I shall be e'er the better
For you.

LADY C. How's this? I do not understand
What you should mean.

SIR ARG. You may, if you consider:
But if you do not, I'll explain it to you.

Have I deserv'd such dealing at your hands?

LADY C. As what?

SIR ARG. As that you should speak one thing to me

And mean another; but I'll make it plainer;
You seem'd to love me, and for love it seems,
Thinking to marry me, have made away
All your estate.

LADY C. How's this?

SIR ARG. Nay, 'tis too true,
Or else your chaplain does you wrong.

LADY C. O villain!

SIR ARG. Nay, villain him no villains; is it so,
Or not?

FRUIT. If she deny it to you, sir,
I can produce her hand, and have the deed.

LADY C. O monstrous villany! O impudence!
Can'st thou abuse me thus, that first of all
Did'st counsel me to do it?

FRUIT. I confess
I gave you way, and for the time did wink
At your false dealing; but at last my conscience
Would not permit me to conceal it longer.
I have discharg'd it now; and told the truth.

SIR ARG. 'Twas well done of you, sir: well, I'll away.

Madam, seek out some other man to cheat,
For me you shall not.

LADY C. Stay, sir, my estate
Shall still be good; the feoffees will be honest.

FRUIT. Ay, that they will, to keep what is their own.

LADY C. O monstrous wickedness! was e'er the like
Heard of before?

FRUIT. I know the feoffees' minds.

Enter FREEMAN, EUPHUES, BARNET, DOTTEREL,
LADY WHIMSEY.

FREE. How fare you, madam. Wherefore look you sadly
At such a joyful time?

LADY C. O Master Freeman,
I am undone and ruin'd.

FRUIT. No, good madam,
We'll see you shall not want.

FREE. How's this?

FRUIT. You shall have a fair competence allow'd
you.

EUPH. What riddle have we here?

LADY C. Out, thou ungracious, dissembling villain.

FRUIT. An indifferent means
Will keep your ladyship; for you are past
Those vanities which younger ladies use:
You need no gaudy clothes, no change of fashions,
No paintings nor perfumes.

EUPH. I would fain know the bottom of this.

LADY W. Servant, can you discover
What this should mean?

DOT. No, mistress, I protest:
With all the wit I have.

FRUIT. And for your house,
You shall have leave to stay here, till we have Provided for you.

LADY C. O, my heart will break!

EUPH. Here is the finest turn that e'er I saw.

SIR ARG. I will resolve you, gentlemen. This lady,
To cosen me in marriage, had (it seems)
Pass'd her estate away: into what hands
'Tis fallen, I know not, nor I care not, I.

FRUIT. 'Tis fallen into the hands of wise men, sir,
That know how to make use of what is theirs.

LADY C. This hypocrite persuaded me to do't,
And then discover'd all, as if on purposes
He sought my ruin.

FRUIT. No, not I, good madam:
'Twas for your soul's health; I have done you good,
And eas'd you of a burden, and a great one.
So much estate would have been still a cause
Of cares unto you, and those cares have hinder'd
Your quiet passage to a better life.

EUPH. Excellent devil! how I love him now!
Never did knavery play a juster part.

FRUIT. And why should you, at such an age as this,

Dream of a marriage? A thing so far
Unfit, nay most unnatural and profane,
To stain that holy ordinance, and make it
But a mere bargain! For two clods of earth
Might have been join'd as well in matrimony.
'Tis for your soul's health, madam, I do this.

EUPH. How much was I mistaken in this chaplain!

I see he has brains.

FREE. Though't be dishonesty
In him, yet justly was it plac'd on her:
And I could even applaud it.

LADY W. I protest I love this chaplain.

DOT. So do I, sweet mistress, or I am an errant fool.

LADY C. But yet I hope
The feoffees may prove honest: I'll try them.

FRUIT. I'll go and bring them to your ladyship.
[Exit FRUITFUL.]

SIR ARG. I'll stay no longer. Make my litter ready.

Lady, farewell; and to you all.

FREE. Nay, sir.

Then let me interpose; let me entreat you,
By all the rites of neighbourhood, Sir Argent,
Make not so sudden a departure now.
What, though the business has gone so cross,
You may part fairly yet. Stay till to-morrow;
Let not the country take too great a notice
Of these proceedings and strange breach: 'twill be Nothing but a dishonour to you both.

Pray, sir, consent: give me your hand, Sir Argent.

SIR ARG. At your entreaty, sir, I'll stay till morning.

FREE. Before that time, you may consider better.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

MATILDA, THEODORE.

MAT. I'll not refuse my uncle's courtesy,
 But go and see his house. I should before
 Have done that duty to him, but I thought
 My visits were not welcome, since he liv'd
 So close and privately.

THEO. Sweet cousin, you'll find
 A happy alteration in my father,
 And that there dwells a kind and honest soul
 Within his breast. Though wretched avarice,
 The usual fault of age, has heretofore
 Too much kept back the good expressions
 Of such-like thoughts, he now will make amends
 To all the world ; and has begun already
 With his poor neighbours.

MAT. Cousin, I shall be Too bad a guest at this sad time, and bring
 Nothing but sorrow to my uncle's house.

THEO. You'll be yourself a welcome guest to
 him ;

And I shall think our roof exceeding happy,
 If it may mitigate that killing grief,
 Which your so solitary life too much
 Has nourish'd in you. Cousin, feed it not :
 'Tis a disease that will in time consume you.
 I have already given the best advice,
 That my poor knowledge will afford, to ease
 Your troubled thoughts. If time, which Heaven allows

To cure all griefs, should not have power to do it ;
 If death of father, mother, husband, wife,
 Should be lamented still, the world would wear
 Nothing but black : sorrow alone would reign
 In every family that lives, and bring

Upon poor mortals a perpetual night.
You must forget it, cousin.

MAT. Never can I
Forget my love to him.

THEO. Nor do I strive
To teach you to forget that love you bear
To his dear memory ; but that grief which lies
Wrapp'd in amongst it, and turns all to poison, Making it mortal to that soul that tastes it—
'Tis that, sweet cousin, which I hope that time
May by degrees extinguish. Will you please
To walk along ? My father long ere this Expects us, I am sure, and longs to see you. [Exeunt.]

EUGENY in the OFFICERS' hands.

EUG. I blame you not at all, that by the law
And virtue of your places are requir'd
To apprehend me.

OFFICER. We are sorry, sir, we were enforc'd to seize you.

EUG. But I wonder
What curious eye it was that search'd so far
Into my secret walks, that did discover
This dark abode of mine, and envied me
My solitary sorrow : such a life,
As I enjoy'd, a man might well afford
To his most great and mortal enemy.

OFFICER. 'Twas a plain fellow, sir, that brought us hither
In the king's name, and left us when we had you.
But, sir, we wish you all the good we may.

EUG. I thank you, friends : I cannot tell at all Whom to suspect ; nor will I further vex
My thoughts in search of such a needless thing.
I call to mind what once my Theodore
Told me by way of a surmise ; but, sure,
It cannot be so foul. Shall I entreat you

To carry me to old Sir Argent Scrape,
 My kinsman ? I would only speak with him,
 Before I go to prison : and let one,
 If you can spare a man, go run for me
 To Master Earthworm's house, and bid his son
 Meet me with old Sir Argent ; he lies now
 At my Lady Covet's house. I have about me
 What will reward your pains, and highly too.

OFFICER. It shall be done, as you would have it,
 sir.

EUG. I dare not send to fair Artemia :
 The sight of her and of so dear a sorrow
 As she would show, would but afflict me more.
 Perchance I may come safely off ; till then
 I would conceal this accident from her.
 But fame is swiftest still, when she goes laden
 With news of mischief : she too soon will hear,
 And in her sorrow I shall doubly suffer.
 Thus are we fortune's pastimes : one day live
 Advanc'd to heaven by the people's breath,
 The next, hurl'd down into th' abyss of death.

Enter EUPHUES, ARTEMIA.

EUPH. But are you sure 'tis hereabouts he lives ?
 Ha ! who is that ? 'Tis he, and in the hands
 Of officers ! Cousin, the mischief's done
 Before we come.

ART. O my dear Eugeny !

EUG. Artemia too ! Ah me ! she swoons !
 Help, help !

Look up, my love ! There is no fear at all
 For me ; no danger : all is safe, and full
 Of hope and comfort.

EUPH. She begins to come
 Unto herself again.

EUG. But pray, sir, tell
 How came you hither, noble Euphues ?

EUPH. I never knew the place ; but now, by her Instructions, found it out. I came to bear Her company, and her intent of coming Was to inform you of a danger near— Of such a monstrous mischief, as perchance You scarce can credit. Old Sir Argent Scrape, By me and by another gentleman, Was overheard to say that he had scouts, And had laid certain plots to apprehend His kinsman Eugeny, just before th' assizes. Besides, what further means he did intend, Closely to work your death, he then declar'd To the old covetous lady, whom he came A suitor to.

EUG. Prophetic Theodore, how right thou wert !

EUPH. This thing, when I had heard, I told it her, and we with speed made hither ; But ere we came, the mischief was fulfill'd.

EUG. I thank you, sir, for this discovery : Howe'er I speed, pray pardon me, if I Shall by the hand of justice die your debtor. How soon from virtue and an honour'd spirit Man may receive what he can never merit ! Be not thou cruel, my Artemia ; Do not torment me with thy grief, and make Me die before my time : let hope a while Suspend thy sorrow ; if the worst should fall, Thy sorrow would but more enfeeble me, And make me suffer faintly for thy sake.

ART. If worst should fall, my love (which heaven forsend), How could I choose but suffer ?

EUPH. I will hope Your safety yet may well be wrought ; and knowing Sir Argent's mind, you know what ways to trust.

ART. Good cousin, help us with thy counsel now, If thou dost love my life.

EUPH. Fear it not, cousin :
If I may aid you, sir, in anything,
You shall command it.

EUG. Sir, I cannot thank you
So much as it deserves : this timely favour,
If not in life, yet shall at least in death
Endear me to you.

ART. Do not name that word,
My dearest love !

EUPH. You must be speedy, sir,
In all your courses now.

EUG. Then let me beg
That you would meet me at my Lady Covet's
I'll ring Sir Argent Scrape so loud a peal,
As shall, perchance, awake his bed-rid soul,
And rouse it, though so deeply sunk in dross—Drown'd and o'erwhelm'd with muck. Go you together,
And leave me to my way.

ART. Farewell, dear love ! [Exeunt severally.]

Enter BARNET, LADY WHIMSEY.

BAR. Madam, 'tis sure ; I know your ladyship
Is so possess'd.

LADY W. I think he loves me well,
And will not now start back from marrying me.

BAR. That is the happy hour he only longs
for ;

But if so strange a thing should come to pass,
Which yet I think impossible, that this
Your marriage should break off, I will give back Into your hand this bond, which I receiv'd ;
And 'tis worth nothing, madam, as you know
By the condition.

LADY W. True, I fear it not ;
But I durst trust you, if 'twere otherwise.

BAR. He waits the hour, when you will please to tie

The happy knot with him.

LADY W. He shall no longer
Wait for it now : I'll go confirm him.

BAR. But think not, gentle madam, that I shark¹

Or cheat him in it : I have to a sum
Greater than this from him as good a title
As right can give, though my unhappy fortunes
Made me forbear the trial of my title,
While his old crafty father was alive.
He held from me a farm of greater value,
As all the neighbours know : I then forbore it,
And will do still, since by an easier way
I may have satisfaction. But here comes
One that has lost a marriage.

Enter TRUSTY, LADY COVET.

LADY C. Tell me, Trusty, what say the feoffees ?

TRUSTY. They'll say nothing, madam ;
Make me no answer, but that they know how
To manage their own fortunes.

LADY C. All the world
Conspires against me ; I am quite undone !

TRUSTY. I promise you truly, madam, I believe
They mean little better than plain knavery.

LADY C. Ay, 'tis too true.

LADY W. How does your ladyship ?
I was in hope to-day we should have seen you
A joyful bride.

LADY C. Ah, madam ! 'twas my folly

¹ i.e., Collect my prey like the shark-fish. So in "Hamlet"—

"Shark'd up a troop of landless resolutea."

To dream of such a thing ; 'tis that has brought me
To all this sorrow, and undone me quite.

LADY W. I hope not so. But, madam, I confess

The marriage could have done you little good :
One of your years, and then a man so old !

LADY C. O, do not mention it ; I am justly punish'd.

LADY W. Pardon me, madam ; I must make so bold

As leave you for a while. Come, Master Barnet,
Shall we go see the party ?

BAR. I wait you, madam. [Exeunt.]

LADY C. My sorrow will not leave me. But,
alas !

'Tis a deserved punishment I suffer
For my unjust oppressions ; I detain'd Scudmore's estate injuriously, and had
No conscience to restore what was not mine,
And now all's ta'en away ! What then I would not,
I cannot now perform, though I desire.

Enter FREEMAN, ARTEMIA.

FREE. Fear not, Artemia, there shall no means
Be left untri'd to save the gentleman.
I did approve thy choice, and still will do,
If fortune will consent. My Lady Covet,
Are you sad still ?

LADY C. Never had any woman
A greater cause of sorrow, Master Freeman ;
For I protest it does not trouble me
So much, that by this cheat I lose the power
Of my estate, as that I lose all means
Of charity or restitution
To any person whom I wrong'd before.

FREE. Why, then, you make a true and perfect use

Of such a cross, and may hereafter take
True comfort from it.

LADY C. If my conscience
Were satisfi'd, I could forsake the rest.

Enter EUPHUES.

EUPH. My cousin, I perceive, has made more haste
Hither than I ; but I have seen a pageant
That, in the saddest time, would make one laugh.

FREE. What, prythee ?

EUPH. I have seen your neighbour Earthworm
In such a mood, as you would wonder at,
And all that ever knew him heretofore.
He is inveighing 'gainst Sir Argent Scrape
For being so basely covetous, as thus
For hope of lucre to betray his kinsman :
A thing that he himself would scorn as much,
He does protest, as can be.

FREE. I have known
It otherwise. What may not come to pass,
When Earthworm is a foe to avarice ?

EUPH. But he, they say, has made it good in deeds.

FREE. He has been so exceeding bountiful
Now to our poor, and vows to be so still,
That we may well believe he is quite chang'd,
And strives to make amends for what is pass'd.
He has, they say, a brave and virtuous son,
Lately come home, that has been cause of all.

EUPH. It well may be : I know young Theodore.
Uncle, he is of strange abilities ;
And to convert his father was an act
Worthy of him.

Enter SERVANT, and SIR ARGENT in his chair.

SER. Madam, Sir Argent Scrape would take his leave

Of you.

LADY C. When it pleases him.

SIR ARG. Get me my litter

Ready presently; I will be gone. Madam, I now am come to give you loving thanks for my good cheer, and so bid you farewell. But let me tell you this, before we part: Things might have been carried another way for your own good; but you may thank yourself for what has happened now.

LADY C. If you suppose

It had been for my good to marry you, You are deceiv'd; for that, in my esteem (Though once I was so foolish to give way To that ridiculous motion), had brought with it As great a misery as that which now Is fall'n upon me.

SIR ARG. How! as great a misery As to be beggar'd?

LADY C. Yes, sir, I'll assure you,

I am of that opinion, and still shall be. But know, Sir Argent, though I now want pow'r To give you that which you still gap'd for, wealth,

I can be charitable, and bestow Somewhat upon you that is better far.

SIR ARG. Better than wealth! what's that?

LADY C. Honest counsel.

Let my calamity admonish you To make a better use of your large wealth, While you may call it yours. Things may be chang'd;

For know, that hand that has afflicted me, Can find out you. You do not stand above it.

SIR ARG. I hope I shall know how to keep mine own.

EUPH. I do begin to pity the poor lady.

FREE. This has wrought goodness in her. Who are these?

Enter EARTHWORM and THEODORE.

My neighbour Earthworm? Lord! how he is chang'd!

EARTH. 'Twas basely done, and like a covetous wretch,

I'll tell him to his face: what care I for him?

I have a purse as well as he.

EUPH. How's this?

EARTH. Betray a kinsman's life to purchase wealth!

O, detestable!

EUPH. O miraculous change!

Do you not hear him, uncle?

EARTH. Master Freeman, happily met.

FREE. Sir, I am glad to see you.

EARTH. I have been long your neighbour, sir, but liv'd

In such a fashion, as I must endeavour
To make amends hereafter for, and strive
To recompence with better neighbourhood.

FREE. It joys me much to see this change in you.

EARTH. Pardon my boldness, madam, that I make

This intrusion.

LADY C. Y'are welcome, Master Earthworm.

EUPH. Let me be bold, then, noble Theodore,
To claim our old acquaintance.

THEO. I shall think it

My honour, worthy sir, to hold that name.

EARTH. Is that Sir Argent Scrape in the chair yonder?

FREE. Yes, sir.

EARTH. O, fie upon him! But soft,
He will be told on't now. [EUGENY brought in.

SIR ARG. Ha! Eugeny!

Why have they brought him hither?

EUG. I am come.

Methinks these looks of mine, inhumane wretch!
Though I were silent, should have power to pierce
That treacherous breast, and wound thy conscience,
Though it be hard and senseless as the idol
Which thou ador'st, thy gold.

SIR ARG. Is this to me, kinsman, you speak?

EUG. Kinsman! Do not wrong
That honest name with thy unhallowed lips.
To find a name for thee and thy foul guilt,
Has so far pos'd me, as I cannot make
Choice of a language fit to tell thee of it.
Traucherous, bloody man! that has betray'd
And sold my life to thy base avarice!

SIR ARG. Who? I betray you?

EUG. Yes; can you deny it?

LADY C. I'll witness it against him, if he do.
'Twas his intent, I know.

EUPH. And so do I:

I overheard his counsels.

EARTH. Out upon him,
Unworthy man!

EUPH. I could e'en laugh to hear
Old Earthworm chide.

EUG. But think upon the deed,
Think on your own decrepit age, and know
That day, by nature's possibility,
Cannot be far from hence, when you must leave
Those wealthy hoards that you so basely lov'd,
And carry nothing with thee, but the guilt
Of impious getting: then, if you would give

To pious uses what you cannot keep,
 Think what a wretched charity it is ;
 And know, this act shall leave a greater stain
 On your detested memory, than all Those seeming deeds of charity can have
 A pow'r to wash away : when men shall say
 In the next age : this goodly hospital,
 This house of alms, this school, though seeming fair,

Was the foul issue of a cursed murder,
 And took foundation in a kinsman's blood.
 The privilege that rich men have in evil.
 Is, that they go unpunish'd to the devil.

SIR ARG. O ! I could wish the deed undone
 again.

Ah me ! what means are left to help it now ?

FREE. Sure, the old man begins to melt indeed.

EUG. Now let me turn to you, my truer friends,
 And take my last farewell.

Enter FRUITFUL and TRUSTY.

EUPH. My noble chaplain !

What pranks comes he to play now ? I had thought

His business had been done.

FRUIT. Health to you, madam !

LADY C. How can you wish me health, that have so labour'd

To ruin me in all things ?

FRUIT. No, good madam ;

'Twas not your ruin, but your good I sought :

Nor was it to deprive you of your means,

But only rectify your conscience.

FREE. How's this ?

EUPH. Another fetch ! this may be worth the hearing.

FRUIT. Madam, you convey'd away
To three good honest men your whole estate.

LADY C. They have not prov'd so honest : I had thought

I might have trusted them.

FRUIT. Then give me hearing.
They, by the virtue of that deed possess'd,
Have back again convey'd it all to you.

LADY C. Ha !

FRUIT. Madam, 'twas done before good witnesses,
Of which your steward here was one.

TRUSTY. Most true.

FRUIT. And all the other are well-known to
you.

Here is the deed.

FREE. Let me peruse it, madam.

LADY C. Good Master Freeman, do.

[FREEMAN reads it to himself.]

EUPH. What plot is this ?

FRUIT. One manor only they except from hence.
Which they suppose you did unjustly hold
From the true heir : his name was Scudmore, madam.

LADY C. I do confess I did unjustly hold it ;
And since have griev'd me much, that while I might,

I made not restitution.

FRUIT. He was poor,
And by the law could not recover it ;
Therefore this means was taken. By this deed
They have convey'd it hither, where it ought
Of right to be : are you content with this ?
And all the rest of your estate is yours.

LADY C. With all my heart.

FREE. Madam, the deed is good.

LADY C. For that estate which justly is pass'd over

To Scudmore's heir, I am so well content,
As that, before these gentlemen, I promise
To pay him back all the arrearages
Of whatsoever profits I have made.

FRUIT. I thank your ladyship. Now know your chaplain,
That wanted orders. [Discovers himself.]

LADY C. Master Scudmore living!

EUPH. My friend, how couldst thou keep con-ceal'd so long
From me?

SCUD. Excuse it, noble Euphues.

ART. O happiness beyond what could be hop'd!
My Eugeny is safe, and all his griefs
At quiet now.

EUG. Is this a vision,
A mere fantastic show, or do I see
Scudmore himself alive? then let me beg
Pardon from him.

SCUD. Long ago 'twas granted:
Thy love I now shall seek. But though awhile
For these my ends I have conceal'd myself,
I ever meant to secure thee from danger.

EUG. What strange unlook'd-for happiness this day
Has brought forth with it!

SCUD. To tell you by what means
I was most strangely cur'd, and found a way
How to conceal my life, will be too long
Now to discourse of here; I will anon Relate at large. But one thing much has griev'd
me,

That my too long concealment has been cause
Of so much sorrow to my constant love,
The fair Matilda. Sir, she is your niece,
Let me intreat my pardon, next to her,
From you.

EARTH. You have it. Go, good Theodore,

And bring her hither, but prepare her first :
 Too sudden apprehension of a joy
 Is sometimes fatal.

THEO. I'll about it gladly. [Exit.

SIR ARG. Dear cousin Eugeny, if I yet may be Thought worthy of that name, pardon my crime,

And my whole life, how short soe'er it be,
 Shall testify my love to be unfeigned.

EUG. I do forgive you freely. Now to you,
 Grave sir, in whose rich bounty it must lie,
 To make me happy in conferring on me
 So bright a jewel as Artemia,
 'Tis your consent I beg.

FREE. You have it freely ;
 Her heart I know she gave you long ago,
 And here I give her hand.

EUG. A richer gift
 Than any monarch of the world can give :
 Bless'd happiness ? Gently my joys distil,¹
 Lest you do break the vessel you should fill.

Enter BARNET, DOTTEREL, LADY WHIMSEY.

EUPH. Here comes another couple to make up
 The day's festivity. Joy to you, madam !

LADY W. Thanks, noble Euphues.

DOT. We have tied the knot,
 That cannot be undone : this gentleman is witness
 Of it.

BAR. Yes, I saw it finish'd.

LADY W. Mistress Artemia, as I suppose,
 I may pronounce as much to you ?

ART. You may as much as I shall wish your ladyship.

¹ [See Introduction to this play, p. 4.]

Enter THEODORE and MATILDA.

SCUD. Here comes the dearest object of my soul,

In whom too much I see my cruelty,
And chide myself. O, pardon me, dear love,
That I too long a time have tyranniz'd
Over thy constant sorrow.

MAT. Dearest Scudmore,
But that my worthy cousin has prepar'd
My heart for this, I should not have believ'd
My flattering eyes.

SCUD. To know brave Theodore,
Next to enjoying thee, was my ambition;
Which now affinity hath bless'd me with.

EUG. His friendship, worthy Scudmore, is a treasure.

THEO. I shall endeavour to deserve your loves.

EARTH. Come, leave your compliments at all hands now,

And hear an old man speak. I must intreat
This favour from all this noble company,
Especially from you, good Master Freeman,
Although this be your daughter's wedding-day,
That you would all be pleas'd to be my guests,
And keep with me your marriage festivals.
Grant my request.

FREE. 'Tis granted, sir, from me.

EUG. And so, I think, from all the company.

EARTH. Then let's be merry: Earthworm's jovial now,

And that's as much as he desires from you.

[To the Pit.]

A WOMAN NEVER VEXED.

EDITION.

A New Wonder, A Woman never Vext. A Pleasant Conceited Comedy: sundry times Acted: never before printed. Written by William Rowley, one of his Maiesties Servants. London, Imprinted by G. P., for Francis Constable, and are to be sold at his shop, at the signe of the Crane in Saint Pauls Churchyard. 1632. 4°.

DILKE'S PREFACE.

(WITH ADDITIONS, &C.)¹

THIS writer is ranked by the editors of the "Biographia Dramatica" in the third class of dramatic writers, and Mr Gifford justly observes it is impossible to place him higher. [Mr Collier, in a note to Rowley's "Match at Midnight," 1633, Introd., supposed that Samuel Rowley, the writer of the historical play on "Henry VIII.," 1605, might be the "Master Rowley, once a rare scholar of Pembroke Hall," mentioned by Meres ("Politeuphuia," 1598, "Anc. Crit. Essays," iii. 154), as one of the best for comedy; but Meres, who was himself a university man, would scarcely confound either Samuel or William Rowley with the Ralph Rowley of Pembroke Hall, writer of certain occasional poetry now forgotten (Cooper's "Athenæ," ii. 388); and it is grossly improbable, surely, that Meres should cite Ralph Rowley as "one of the best for comedy" on the strength of such pieces as are connected with Samuel Rowley's name. Mr Collier remarks, that it appears from Henslowe's memoranda ("Diary," pp. 120, 218) that "in the very year in which Meres wrote, [Samuel Rowley] was reduced to accept the situation of a hireling at Henslowe's theatre. There is no trace of anything written by him earlier than Jan. 7, 1601-2, when he assisted William Haughton and William Borne in writing a piece called "Judas." As to William, he could scarcely have acquired any reputation so early, and what, on the whole, is most likely to have been the truth is, that Ralph Rowley composed pieces which, like those of the Earl of Oxford and others, have not survived.¹ Of the time or place of his birth, or decease, we are altogether ignorant. Of his life it is only known that he was a player. That he lived on terms of intimacy with the dramatic writers of his time is sufficiently evident from his having written in conjunction with many of them; and, if we may believe the title-page, [which we cannot, we should be able to believe that] in one ² he received assistance from Shakespeare himself. He was a comedian, and one of the Prince's company of players; and Oldys observes, in his MSS. notes to Langbaine, on the authority of [transcripts made by Vertue from] the office books of Lord Harrington, Treasurer of the Chambers in those years, that "One William Rowley was head of the Prince's company of comedians from 1613 to 1616:" this, there can be [no] doubt, was our author; and [he continued to belong to that company till the death of James I.¹] The tragedy of "All's Lost by Lust" (as it is better known) would perhaps have been selected in preference, but for the resemblance it bears, in the general outline, to the "Women beware Women" of Middleton, and the "Appius and Virginia" of Webster,² to either of which, in my opinion, it is inferior. On the present play Langbaine observes that the passage of the widow's finding her wedding-ring, which she dropped in crossing the Thames, in the belly of a fish which her maid bought accidentally in the market, is founded either upon the story of Polycrates of Samos, as the author may read at large in Herodotus, lib. 3, sive Thalia; or upon the like story related of one Anderson of Newcastle, by Docter Fuller, in his "Worthies of England." The story here referred to is this: "A citizen of Newcastle (whose name I take to be M. Anderson) talking with a friend of his upon Newcastle bridge, and fingering his ring, before he was aware let it fall into the river; and was much troubled with the losse of it, till by a fish caught in the river that losse was repaired, and his ring restored to him." It is quite impossible, however, that our author could have had this story from Fuller's "Worthies," which was not published till many years after this drama was in print: he might, however, have found it, whence indeed Fuller himself took it (and the story of Polycrates is likewise quoted there), in the Preface to a little work called "Vox Piscis, or the Book-Fish, containing three Treatises, which were found in the belly of a Cod-fish in Cambridge Market, on Midsummer Eve last, Anno Domini 1626 ;" published in London in 1627. It is not noticed either by Langbaine or the editors of the "Biographia Dramatica" that this play is, in part, historical. This, however, is the case ; and I have collected together, from various scattered notices in Stow and Strype, the best account I was enabled of Stephen Foster, his wife, and Alderman Brewen,¹ three of the principal persons in the drama. Sir Stephen Foster was the son of Robert Foster of London, stock-fishmonger ; he was elected Sheriff of London in the year 1444, and Lord Mayor in 1454, and served as member for that city in the parliament held at Westminster in the thirteenth of Henry VI. Speaking of Ludgate, Strype says, (Append. p. 26), "There happened to be prisoner there, one Stephen Foster, who (as poor men are at this day) was a cryer at the grate, to beg the benevolent charities of pious and commiserate benefactors that passed by. As he was doing his doleful office, a rich widow of London hearing his complaint, enquired of him what would release him ? To which he answered, Twenty pound ; which she in charity expended ; and clearing him out of prison, entertained him in her service ; who, afterward falling into the way of merchandise, and increasing as well in wealth as courage, wooed his mistress, Dame Agnes, and married her.

¹ [This play having been printed by Dilke, and the following one (by the same author) in Dodsley's collection, the two prefaces presented, of course, many repetitions, as well as certain mistakes. That now given (from a collation of the two) will, it is hoped, be found to contain the whole matter of both without these accidental oversights.]

¹ Malone (Sh. by Bosw. II. 172) expresses his conviction that this "rare scholar of Pembroke Hall" was neither William nor Samuel Rowley, but Ralph Rowley, who became a student of Pembroke Hall in 1579, and was elected fellow in 1583.—Collier.

² ["The Birth of Merlin," 1662.]

¹ [Halliwell's "New Illustrations of the Life of Shakespeare," 1875, pp. 29, 30, where a curious anecdote of him is given.]

² The title of "All's Lost by Lust" might, at least with equal propriety, be given to the others.

"Her riches and his industry brought him both great wealth and honour, being afterwards no less than Sir Stephen Foster, Lord Mayor of the honourable city of London : yet whilst he lived in this great honour and dignity, he forgot not the place of his captivity ; but, mindful of the sad and irksome place wherein poor men were imprisoned, bethought himself of enlarging it, to make it a little more delightful and pleasant for those who in aftertimes should be imprisoned and shut up therein. And, in order thereunto, acquainted his lady with this his pious purpose and intention, in whom likewise he found so affable and willing a mind to do good to the poor, that she promised to expend as much as he should do for the carrying on of the work; and, having possessions adjoining thereunto, they caused to be erected and built the rooms and places following, that is to say, the paper house, the porch, the watch-hall, the upper and lower lumbries, the cellar, the long ward, and the chapel for divine service; in which chapel is an inscription upon the wall, containing these words—

¹ [In the old copy and by Dilke the name is given as Bruin.]

“This chapel was erected and ordained for the divine worship and service of God, by the Right Honourable Sir Stephen Foster, Knight, some time Lord Maior of this honourable city, and by Dame Agnes his wife, for the use and godly exercise of the prisoners in this prison of Ludgate, Anno 1454.

“. . . He likewise gave maintenance for a preaching minister,” . . . and “ordained what he had so built, with that little which was before, should be free for all freemen, and that they providing their own bedding should pay nothing at their departure for lodging or chamber-rent.”¹

There can be little doubt from the inscription in the chapel, that this worthy man was alive in the year 1454; it is still more certain from the following extract from Stow, that he was dead in 1463: “In the year 1463, the third of Edward the Fourth, Mathew Philip being mayor, in a common counsaile, at the request of the well-disposed, blessed, and devout woman, Dame Agnes Foster, widow, late wife to Stephen Foster, fishmonger, sometime mayor, for the comfort and reliefe of all the poore prisoners, certaine articles were established. In primis, that the new works then late edified by the same Dame Agnes, for the inlarging of the prison of Ludgate, from thenceforth should be had and taken as a parte and parcell of the saide prison of Ludgate, so that both the old and new works of Ludgate aforesaid, be one prison, gaile, keeping, and charge for evermore." To this Stow adds, "The said quadrant strongly builded of stone, by the fore-named Stephen Foster, and Agnes his wife, containeth a large walking-place by ground, . . . the like roome it hath over it for lodgings, and over all a fayre leades to walke upon, well imbattayled, all for ease of prisoners, to the ende they shoulde have lodging and water free without charge: as by certaine verses grauen in copper, and fixed on the said quadrant, I have read in forme following—

¹ [See further Stow, edit. 1720, bk. i. p. 21.]

' Deuout soules that passe this way,
 for Stephen Foster late mayor, hartely pray,
 And Dame Agnes his spouse, to God consecrate, that of pittie this house made for Lōdoners in Ludgate.
 So that for lodging and water prisoners here nought pay,
 as there keepers shall answer at dreadfull domes day.'

"This plate, and one other of his armes, taken downe with the old gate, I caused to be fixed over the entrie of the said quadrant, but the verses being unhappily turned inward to the wall, the like in effect is grauen outward in prose, declaring him to be a fishmonger, because some upon a light occasion (as a maydens heade in a glasse window) had fabuled him to bee a mercer, and to have begged there at Ludgate." "They were both buried (Stow, p. 163, edit. 1598) at Butolph's church, Billingsgate." How far the poet has deviated from the tradition as recorded by Strype, the reader will be now as well able to decide as myself : when I speak of the tradition, I allude only to the circumstance of his having been confined a prisoner in Ludgate, and to his release by his wife (by his nephew according to the drama) ; and this I do on the authority of Stow, the elder of the historians who, in his concluding remarks, refers to it as a fable. Of the charitable acts of these worthy people there can be no doubt. In relation to the character of Bruin, I find (Strype, ii. 260) that "In the year 1197, Walter Brune, a citizen of London, and Rosia his wife, founded the hospital of Our Lady, called Domus Dei, or St Mary the Spittle, without Bishopsgate in London, an house of such relief to the needy, that there was found standing at the surrender thereof nine score beds well furnished for receipt of poor people." The reader cannot fail to notice the gross anachronisms with which the plot of this drama abounds ; something, however, may be said in excuse of the bringing together such men as Foster and Bruin ; but the introduction of Henry III. is so wanton and unnecessary, that there can be little doubt it is an error of the printer's, and that Henry VI. is the character intended, in whose time Sir Stephen Foster lived. I did not, however, think it necessary to disturb the text ; not out of respect to the quarto, for a more disgraceful work never issued from the press even of the printers of that age, but because, the circumstance having been once noticed, it becomes of little consequence. While on this subject I may just observe, that in the original this play is, with very trifling limitations, throughout printed as blank verse : by what possible rule or ear the division was made it is absolutely impossible to conceive ; some scenes have without hesitation been reduced to prose ; and by changing the construction of whole speeches, innumerable couplets have been restored : if yet the attentive reader shall discover passages (and that many have escaped my notice I cannot doubt), on which he would willingly exercise his skill, I can only observe that he must not make too free with the pruning knife ; that it is difficult to distinguish between a licentious metre and measured prose ; and that very little good dramatic dialogue of the higher walks can be found, that, with moderate torturing to the eye and ear, may not pass for such metre.

The following is a list of his dramatic works—

1. "A New Wonder," "A Woman never vext," C. 4^o, 1632.

2. A Tragedy called, All's Lost by Lust. Written by William Rowley. Divers times Acted by the Lady Elizabeths Servants. And now lately by her Maiesties Servants, with great applause, at the Phœnix in Drury-Lane. 4^o, 1633.

3. "A Match at Midnight," C. 4^o, 1633, printed post.

4. "A Shoemaker's a Gentleman," C. 4^o, 1638.

He wrote also, in conjunction with Day and Wilkins,

5. "The Travels of Three English Brothers," Sir Thomas, Sir Anthony, and Mr Robert Sherley. 4^o, 1607.

With Middleton,

6. "A Fair Quarrel," C. 4^o, 1617.

7. "The World toss'd at Tennis," M. 4^o, 1620.

8. "The Spanish Gipsy," C. 4^o, 1663.

And,

9. "The Changeling," T. 4^o, 1653.

With Fletcher,

10. "The Maid of the Mill," fol. 1647.

With Massinger and Middleton,

11. "The Old Law," T. C. 4^o, 1656.
With Dekker and Ford,
 12. "The Witch of Edmonton," T. C. 4^m, 1658.
And (it is, however, very doubtful) with Shakespeare,
 13. "The Birth of Merlin," T. C. 4^o, 1662.
With Webster (though Webster's participation is equally problematical), 14. "A Cure for a Cuckold," C. 1661.
And,
 15. "The Thracian Wonder," C. H. 4^o, 1661.
And with Heywood,
 16. "Fortune by Land and Sea," C. 4^o, 1655.
- The following are also entered in his name on the Books of the Stationers' Company—
- "The Fool without Book."
"A Knave in Print ; or, One for Another."
"The Nonesuch."¹
"The Book of the Four Honoured Loves."
And,
"The Parliament of Love."

In the Dramatis Personæ, prefixed to his own play of "All's Lost by Lust," the part of Jaques, a simple clownish gentleman, is said to have been personated by the poet ; and in Middleton's "Inner Temple Masque," 1619, he performed the part of Plumb-porridge.

It appears from Sir H. Herbert's office book, that one of the Rowleys wrote "A Match or No Match ;" this is most probably our author's "Match at Midnight." Rowley wrote also a [prose] pamphlet called, "A Search for Money ; or, The Lamentable Complaint for the Loss of the Wandering Knight, Monsieur L'Argent,"

¹ [This and the two following plays were in Warburton's collection of MSS. dramas, and appear to have perished.]

&c., 4°, 1609 ;¹ [an elegy on a fellow-performer, Hugh Atwell, who died on the 25th September 1621 ; printed on a broadside, and two or three other poetical trifles.]²

¹ [Chalmers, and after him Dilke, confounded Samuel with William Rowley, supposing the latter to be the writer of the historical play on the reign of Henry VIII. 4°, 1605. 1613, &c.]

² [Hazlitt's " Handbook," in v.]

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

KING HENRY III.

MOUNTFORD.

PEMBROKE.

ARUNDEL.

CARDINAL.

LORD MAYOR.

OLD FOSTER

ALDERMAN BREWEN.

STEPHEN, brother to Old Foster.

ROBERT, son to Old Foster.

SIR GODFREY SPEEDWELL, } suitors to Jane.

INNOCENT LAMBSKIN, }

RICHARD, factor to Old Foster.

GEORGE, factor to Brewen.

DOCTOR.

HOST BOXALL.

JACK, } Gamesters.

DICK, }

HUGH, }

ROGER, the clown, servant to the Widow.

KEEPER OF LUDGATE.

WIDOW, the woman never vex'd.

MISTRESS FOSTER, wife to Old Foster.

JANE, daughter to Brewen.

JOAN, servant to Widow.

A NEW WONDER :
A WOMAN NEVER VEXED.¹

ACT I., SCENE I.

Enter OLD FOSTER, ALDERMAN BREWEN, and two factors,² RICHARD and GEORGE.

O. FOS. This air has a sweet breath, Master Brewen.

BREW. Your partner, sir.

O. FOS. Ay, and in good, I hope : this halcyon gale

Plays the lewd wanton with our dancing sails,
And makes 'em big³ with vaporous embryo.⁴

BREW. 'Tis no more yet ; but then our fraught is full,

When she returns laden with merchandise,
And safe deliver'd with our customage.

¹ [This play was first reprinted by Dilke in his "Old English Plays," 1816.]

² The word factor is here used in a more limited sense than at present, as Richard and George appear to have been the exclusive servants of the other two.

³ So Titania, in "A Midsummer Night's Dream"—

"We have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied with the wanton wind."

⁴ [Old copy and Dilke, envy.]

O. FOS. Such a delivery heaven send us ;
But time must ripen it. Are our accounts made even ?

GEORGE. To the quantity of a penny, if his agree with mine. What's yours, Richard ?

RICH. Five hundred sixty pounds. Read the gross sum of your broadcloths.

GEORGE. 68 pieces at B, ss, and 1 ; 57 at 1, ss, and o.¹

RICH. Just : lead nineteen ton.

O. FOS. As evenly we will lay our bosoms
As our bottoms, with love as merchandise,
And may they both increase t' infinities.

BREW. Especially at home ; that golden traffic,
love,

Is scantier far than gold ; and one mine of that
More worth than twenty argosies²
Of the world's richest treasure.

O. FOS. Here you shall dig [Laying his hand on his breast], and find your lading.

BREW. Here's your exchange : and, as in love,
So we'll participate in merchandise.

O. FOS. The merchant's casualty :
We always venture on uncertain odds,

¹ These are, I believe, the private marks of the merchants to denote the value of their goods, a sort of cipher known only to themselves. They may, however, allude to the marks affixed to the different packages in which the pieces were contained.

² Argosies [were ships chiefly used for commercial purposes, but also occasionally employed in what was known at Venice as the mercantile marine. They were of large size. The origin of the word is doubtful ; but it probably comes from Argo, the name of the vessel which sailed, according to tradition, in the Argonautic cruise.] Gremio, in the "Taming of the Shrew," talks of an argosy which he would settle on Bianca, and then tauntingly asks—

"What, have I chok'd you with an argosy !"

Although we bear hope's emblem, the anchor,
With us. The wind brought it; let the wind blow 't

Away again; should not the sea sometimes
Be partner with us, our wealth would swallow us.

BREW. A good resolve: but now I must be bold
To touch you with somewhat that concerns you.

O. Fos. I could prevent¹ you: is't not my unthrifty brother?

BREW. Nay, leave out th' adjective (unthrifty);
Your brother, sir—'tis he that I would speak of.

O. Fos. He cannot be nam'd without unthrifty,
sir;

'Tis his proper epithet: would you conceit
But what my love has done for him:
So oft, so chargeable, and so expensive,
You would not urge another addition.

BREW. Nay, sir, you must not stay at quantity,
Till he forfeit the name of brother,
Which is inseparable: he's now in Ludgate, sir.
And part of your treasure lies buried with him.

O. Fos. Ay, by vulgar blemish, but not by any good account:

There let him howl; 'tis the best stay he hath;
For nothing but a prison can contain him,
So boundless is his riot: twice have I rais'd
His decayed fortunes to a fair estate;
But with as fruitless charity as if I had thrown
My safe-landed substance back into the sea;
Or dress in pity some corrupted jade,
And he should kick me for my courtesy.
I am sure you cannot but hear what quicksands
He finds out; as dice, cards, pigeon-holes,²

¹ [Anticipate.]

² Pigeon-holes seems to have been the game which is sometimes called trou-madame, or trol-my-dames. See

And which is more, should I not restrain it,
He'd make my state his prodigality.¹

BREW. All this may be, sir ; yet examples daily show

To our eyes that prodigals return at last ;
And the loudest roarer² (as our city phrase is)
Will speak calm and smooth ; you must help with hope, sir :

Had I such a brother, I should think
That heaven had made him as an instrument
For my best charity to work upon :
This is a maxim sure, Some are made poor,
That rich men by giving may increase their store.

Nor think, sir,
That I do tax your labours and mean myself
For to stand idly by ; for I have vow'd,
If heaven but bless this voyage now abroad,
To leave some memorable relic after me,
That shall preserve my name alive till doomsday.

O. Fos. Ay, sir, that work is good, and therein could I

Join with your good intents ; but to relieve
A wastè-good, a spendthrift——

BREW. O, no more, no more, good sir !

Steevens's note on "The Winter's Tale," act iv. sc. 2 ; and in Farmer's note on the same passage, the reader will find a description of the manner of playing it. [See "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," ii. 325.]

¹ [This expression is repeated lower down, or it might have been supposed that a word was wanting to complete the sense. As it is, the meaning can be easily guessed at.]

² Roarer was the common cant word for the swaggering drunkard of our poet's age. Its occurrence is sufficiently common. So in Dekker's play, "If it be not a Good Play, the Devil's in it"——

"Those bloody thoughts will damn you into hell.

Scr. Do you think so ? What becomes of our roaring boys then, that stab healths one to another ?"

O. FOS. [To RICH.] Sirrah, when saw you my son Robert?

RICH. This morning, sir; he said he would go visit his uncle.

O. FOS. I pay for their meetings, I am sure: that boy

Makes prize of all his fingers 'light upon
To relieve his unthrifty uncle.

BREW. Does he rob!¹ In troth, I commend him.

O. FOS. [To RICH.] 'Tis partly your fault, sirrah; you see't and suffer it. [Aside.]

RICH. Sir, mine's a servant's duty, his a son's; Nor know I better how to express my love Unto yourself, than by loving your son.

O. FOS. By concealing of his pilferings.

RICH. I dare not call them so; he is my second master,

And methinks 'tis far above my limits
Either to check or to complain of him.

BREW. Gramercy, Dick, thou mak'st a good construction;

[To O. Fos.] And your son Robert a natural nephew's part

To relieve his poor uncle.

O. FOS. 'Tis in neither well, sir: for note but the Condition of my estate; I'm lately married To a wealthy widow, from whom my substance Chiefly does arise: she has observed this in her Son-in-law, often complains and grudges at it, And what foul broils such civil discords bring, Few married men are ignorant of.

Enter MISTRESS FOSTER.

Nay, will you see a present proof of it?

MRS FOS. Shall I not live to breathe a quiet hour?

¹ [A play may be intended on rob and Robert.]

I would I were a beggar with content
Rather than thus be thwarted for mine own.

O. Fos. Why, what's the matter, woman ?

MRS Fos. I'll rouse 'em up,
Though you regard not of my just complaints,
Neither in love to me, nor [for] preserving me
From other injuries, both which you're tied to
By all the rightful laws, heavenly or humane—
But I'll complain, sir, where I will be heard.

O. Fos. Nay, thou'lt be heard too far.

MRS Fos. Nay, sir, I will be heard :
Some awkward star threw out's unhappy fire
At my conception, and 'twill never quench,
While I have heat in me. Would I were cold !
There would be bonfires made to warm defame :
My death would be a jubilee to some.

O. Fos. Why, sir, how should I minister remedy
And know not the cause ?

BREW. Mother-o'-pearl !¹ Woman, shew your husband the cause.

MRS Fos. Had he been a husband, sir, I had no cause.

[So] to complain : I threw down at his feet
The subjection of his whole estate : he did not Marry me for love's sake, nor for pity ;
But love to that I had ; he now neglects
The love he had before : a prodigal
Is suffer'd to lay waste those worldly blessings,
Which I enclosed long,² intending for good uses.

O. Fos. That's my son.

MRS Fos. Ay, thou know'st it well enough ;
He's the conduit-pipe
That throws it forth into the common shore.

¹ This seems a cant expression, as Brewen several times uses it.

² [Old copy and Dilke, long enclosed.]

O. FOS. And th' other's my brother.

MRS FOS. You may well shame,
As I do grieve the kindred ; but I'd make
The one a stranger, the other a servant—
No son nor brother ; for they deserve neither
Of those offices.

O. FOS. Why, did I ever cherish him ! have not
I threaten'd him
With disinheritance for this disorder ?

MRS FOS. Why do you not perform it ?

O. FOS. The other's in Ludgate.

MRS FOS. No ; he's in my house, approving to my face
The charitable office of his kind nephew
Who with his pilfering purloin'd from me,
Has set him at liberty ; if this may be suffer'd,
I'll have no eyes to see.

O. FOS. Prythee, content thyself, I'll see
A present remedy. Sirrah, go call 'em in :
This worthy gentleman shall know the cause,
And censure for us both with equity.

BREW. Nay, good sir, let not me be so employ'd,
For I shall favour one for pity,
The other for your love's sake.

Enter ROBERT and STEPHEN FOSTER.

O. FOS. Now, sir,
Are all my words with you so light esteem'd,
That they can take no hold upon your duty ?

ROB. Misconstrue not, I beseech you.

MRS FOS. Nay, he'll approve his good deeds, I warrant you.

O. FOS. And you, sir ?

STEPH. Well, sir.

O. FOS. I had thought you had been in Ludgate, sir ?

STEPH. Why, you see where I am, sir.

O. FOS. Why, where are you, sir ?

STEPH. In debt, sir, in debt.

O. FOS. Indeed, that is a place you hardly can be Removed from ; but this is not a place fit
For one in debt. How came you out of prison, sirrah ?¹

STEPH. As I went into prison, sirrah—by the keepers.

O. FOS. [To ROB.] This was your work, to let this bandog loose.

ROB. Sir, it was my duty to let my uncle loose.

O. FOS. Your duty did belong to me, and I Did not command it.

ROB. You cannot make a separation, sir,
Betwixt the duty that belongs to me
And love unto my uncle : as well you may Bid me [to] love my maker, and neglect
The creature which he hath bid me [to] love :²
If man to man join not a love on earth,
They love not heaven, nor him that dwells above it ;
Such is my duty ; a strong correlative
Unto my uncle—why, he's half yourself.

BREW. Believe me, sir, he has answer'd you well.

O. FOS. He has not, worthy sir ;
But to make void that false construction.
Here I disclaim the title of a brother ;
And by that disclaim hast thou lost thy child's part :

Be thou engag'd for any debts of his,
In prison rot with him ; my goods shall not Purchase such fruitless recompence.

¹ [In the old copy and Dilke this speech is printed as prose. The old copy reads that's—can hardly.]

² Our poet here evidently alludes to a passage in the First Epistle to St John, chap. iii. ver. 10.

STEPH. Then thou'rt a scurvy father and a filthy brother.

MRS FOS. Ay, ay, sir, your tongue cannot defame his reputation.

STEPH. But yours can; for all the city reports what an abominable scold he has got to his wife.

O. FOS. If e'er I know thou keep'st him company,

I'll take my blessing from thee whilst I live,
And that which after me should bless thy 'state.

STEPH. And I'll proclaim thy baseness to the world;

Ballads I'll make, and make 'em tavern music,
To sing thy churlish cruelty.

O. FOS. Tut, tut, these are babbles.¹

STEPH. Each festival day I'll come unto thy house,
And I will piss upon thy threshold.

O. FOS. You must be out of prison first, sir.

STEPH. If e'er I live to see thee sheriff of London,

I'll gild thy painted posts² cum privilegio,
And kick thy sergeants.

ROB. Nay, good uncle!

STEPH. Why, I'll beg for thee, boy;
I'll break this leg, and bind it up again,
To pull out pity from a stony breast,
Rather than thou shalt want.

O. FOS. Ay, do; let him sear up his arm, and scarf it up
With two yards of rope; counterfeit two villains;

¹ i.e., Idle tales.

² It appears to have been the custom for the sheriff to have a post set up at his door as an indication of his office. So in the "Twelfth Night" of Shakespeare, Malvolio says of Cesario, "He'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post." See notes on act i. sc. 5, where the passage in the text has been quoted by Steevens.

Beg under a hedge, and share your bounty :¹
 But come not near my house ;
 Nor thou in's company, if thou'lt obey :
 There's punishment for thee ; for thee there's worse :
 The loss of all that's mine, with my dear curse.

[Exeunt.

Manent STEPHEN and ROBERT.

STEPH. Churl ! dog ! you churlish rascally miser !

ROB. Nay, good uncle, throw not foul language :
 This is but heat, sir, and I doubt not but
 To cool this rage with my obedience :
 But, uncle, you must not then heap² such fuel.

STEPH. Coz, I grieve for thee, that thou hast undergone
 Thy father's curse for love unto thy uncle.

ROB. Tut ! that bond shall ne'er be cancell'd,
 sir.

STEPH. I pity that, i' faith.

ROB. Let pity then for me turn to yourself :
 Bethink yourself, sir, of some course that might Befit your estate, and let me guide it.

STEPH. Ha, a course ? 'Sfoot ! I have't !³ Coz, canst lend me forty shillings ? Could I but repair this old decay'd tenement of mine with some new plaister ; for, alas, what can a man do in such a case as this ?

¹ Our poet alludes here to the methods which are still frequently practised amongst beggars, of making artificial sores. The reader will find many of these mentioned by Prigg in act ii. sc. 1 of the "Beggar's Bush" of Beaumont and Fletcher. In the quarto this speech is in horrible metre ; and the same may be observed of nearly the whole remainder of this scene, and until the clown quits the stage in the next.

² [Old copy and Dilke, heap on.]

³ "'Sfoot I hate," [i.e., ha't] is the reading of the 4^o.

ROB. Ay, but your course, uncle?

STEPH. Tush! leave that to me, because thou shalt wonder at it: if you should see me in a scarlet gown within the compass of a gold chain, then I hope you'll say that I do keep myself in good compass: then, sir, if the cap of maintenance¹ do march before me, and not a cap be suffer'd to be worn in my presence, pray do not upbraid me with my former poverty. I cannot tell, state and wealth may make a man forget himself; but, I beseech you, do not; there are things in my head that you dream not of; dare you try me, coz?

ROB. Why, forty shillings, uncle, shall not keep back

Your fortunes.

STEPH. Why, gramercy, coz. [Aside.] Now if the dice do run right, this forty shillings may set me up again: to lay't on my back, and so to pawn it, there's ne'er a damn'd broker in the world will give me half the worth on't: no, whilst 'tis in ready cash, that's the surest way: seven is better than eleven; a pox take the bones!² an they will not favour a man sometimes.

ROB. Look you, uncle, there's forty shillings for you.

STEPH. As many good angels guard thee, as thou hast given me bad ones to seduce me! for these deputy devils damn worse than the old ones. Now, coz, pray listen; listen after my transformation: I will henceforth turn an apostate to prodigality ; I will eat cheese and onions, and buy lordships ; and will not you think this strange ?

¹ Caps of maintenance are said to be carried in state on occasions of great solemnity before the mayors of several cities in England. Stephen had before imagined himself arrayed with the gown and chain of an alderman; he is now describing his consequence as the future Lord Mayor of London.

² The dice.

ROB. I am glad you're merry, uncle ; but this is fix'd

Betwixt an uncle and a nephew's love ;
Though my estate be poor, revenues scant,
Whilst I have any left, you shall not want.

STEPH. Why, gramercy ! by this hand I'll make thee an alderman, before I die, do but follow my steps. [Exeunt.

Enter WIDOW and CLOWN.

WID. Sirrah, will the churchman come I sent you for ?

CLOWN. Yes, mistress, he will come ; but pray, resolve me one thing for my long service. What business have you with the churchman ? Is it to make your will, or to get you a new husband ?

WID. Suppose to make my will, how then ?

CLOWN. Then I would desire you to remember me, mistress ; I have serv'd you long, and that's the best service to a woman : make a good will, if you mean to die, that it may not be said, Though most women be long-liv'd, yet they all die with an ill-will.

WID. So, sir ; suppose it be for marriage ?

CLOWN. Why, then, remember yourself, mistress : take heed how you give away the head ; it stands yet upon the shoulders of your widowhood : the loving, embracing ivy has yet the upper place in the house ; if you give it to the holly, take heed, there's pricks in holly ; or if you fear not the pricks, take heed of the wands ; you cannot have the pricks without the wands : you give away the sword, and must defend yourself with the scabbard : these are pretty instructions of a friend ; I would be loth to see you cast down, and not well taken up.

WID. Well, sir, well, let not all this trouble you ; see, he's come : will you begone ?

Enter DOCTOR.¹

CLOWN. I will first give him a caveat, to use you as kindly as he can. [To the DOCTOR.] If you find my mistress have a mind to this coupling at barley-break, let her not be the last couple to be left in hell.²

DOC. I would I knew your meaning, sir.

CLOWN. If she have a mind to a fresh husband or so, use her as well as you can ; let her enter into as easy bands as may be.

DOC. Sir, this is none of my traffic ; I sell no husbands.

CLOWN. Then you do wrong, sir ; for you take money for 'em : what woman can have a husband, but you must have custom for him ? and often the ware proves naught too—not worth the impost.

DOC. Your man's pregnant³ and merry, mistress.

WID. He's saucy, sir. Sirrah, you'll begone ?

CLOWN. Nay, at the second hand you'll have a fee too ; you sell in the church ; and⁴ they bring 'em again to your churchyard, you must have tollage : methinks, if a man die whether you will or no, he should be buried whether you would or no.

DOC. Nay, now you wade too far, sir.

WID. You'll begone, sirrah !

CLOWN. Mistress, make him your friend ; for he knows what rate good husbands are at ; if ¹ It is to be remembered that the doctor here introduced is a divine, and not a physician.

² [See "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," ii., 293-5.]

³ [Full of wit.] So in "Hamlet"—

"How pregnant sometimes his replies are."

⁴ [If.]

there hath been a dearth of women of late, you may chance pick out a good prize; but take heed of a clerk.

WID. Will you yet, sir, after your needless trouble?

Begone, and bid the maids dress dinner!

CLOWN. Mistress, 'tis fasting day to-day, there's nothing

But fish.

WID. Let there be store of that; let bounty furnish the table, and charity shall be the voider. What fish is there, sirrah?

CLOWN. Marry, there is salmon, pike, and fresh cod, soles, maids,¹ and plaice.

WID. Bid 'em haste to dress 'em then.

CLOWN. Nay, mistress, I'll help 'em too; the maids shall first dress the pike and the cod, and then [Aside] I'll dress the maids in the place you wot on. [Exit CLOWN.]

DOC. You sent for me, gentlewoman?

WID. Sir, I did: and to this end: I have some scruples in my conscience; Some doubtful problems which I cannot answer Nor reconcile; I'd have you make them plain.

DOC. This is my duty; pray [you], speak your mind.

WID. And as I speak, I must remember heaven, That gave those blessings which I must relate: Sir, you now behold a wond'rous woman; You only wonder at the epithet; I can approve it good: guess at mine age.

DOC. At the half-way 'twixt thirty and forty.

WID. 'Twas not much amiss; yet nearest to the last.

How think you then, is not this a wonder? That a woman lives full seven-and-thirty years

¹ [Thornbacks.]

Maid to a wife, and wife unto a widow,
 Now widow'd, and mine own, yet all this while
 From the extremest verge of my remembrance,
 Even from my weaning-hour unto this minute,
 Did never taste what was calamity ?
 I know not yet what grief is, yet have sought
 An hundred ways for its acquaintance : with me
 Prosperity hath kept so close a watch,
 That even those things that I have meant a cross,
 Have that way turn'd a blessing. Is it not strange ?

DOC. Unparallel'd ; this gift is singular,
 And to you alone belonging : you are the moon,
 For there's but one : all women else are stars,
 For there are none of like condition.
 Full oft and many have I heard complain
 Of discontents, thwarts, and adversities,
 But a second to yourself I never knew :
 To groan under the superflux of blessings,
 To have ever been alien unto sorrow,
 No trip of fate ? Sure, it is wonderful.

WID. Ay, sir, 'tis wonderful : but is it well ?
 For it is now my chief affliction.
 I have heard you say, that the child of heaven
 Shall suffer many tribulations ;
 Nay, kings and princes share them with their subjects :

Then I that know not any chastisement,
 How may I know my part of childhood ?¹

DOC. 'Tis a good doubt ; but make it not extreme.

'Tis some affliction that you are afflicted
 For want of affliction ; cherish that :
 Yet wrest it not to misconstruction ;
 For all your blessings are free gifts from heaven—

¹ Our poet alludes here to a passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xii. vers. 7 and 8.

Health, wealth, and peace ; nor can they turn to curses

But by abuse. Pray, let me question you :
 You lost a husband—was it no grief to you ?

WID. It was ; but very small. No sooner I
 Had given it entertainment as a sorrow,
 But straight it turn'd unto my treble joy :
 A comfortable revelation prompts me then,
 That husband (whom in life I held so dear)
 Had chang'd a frailty to unchanging joys ;
 Methought I saw him stellified in heaven,
 And singing hallelujahs 'mongst a quire
 Of white-sainted souls : then again it spake,
 And said it was a sin for me to grieve
 At his best good, that I esteemed best :
 And thus this slender shadow of a grief
 Vanish'd again.

DOC. All this was happy ; nor can you wrest it from

A heavenly blessing : do not appoint the rod ;
 Leave still the stroke unto the magistrate :
 The time is not passed, but you may feel enough.

WID. One taste more I had, although but little,
 Yet I would aggravate to make the most on't ;
 Thus 'twas : the other day it was my hap,
 In crossing of the Thames,
 To drop that wedlock ring from off my finger
 That once conjoin'd me and my dead husband ;
 It sank ; I priz'd it dear—the dearer, 'cause it kept

Still in mine eye the memory of my loss ;
 Yet I griev'd [less] the loss ; and [I] did joy withal,

That I had found a grief : and this is all
 The sorrow I can boast of.

DOC. This is but small.

WID. Nay, sure I am of this opinion,
 That had I suffered a draught to be made for it,

The bottom would have sent it up again,
I am so wondrously fortunate.

DOC. You would not suffer it ?

Enter CLOWN.

WID. Not for my whole estate.

CLOWN. O mistress ! where are you ? I think you are the fortunatest woman that ever breathed on two shoes : the thief is found.

WID. The thief ! what thief ? I never was so happy to be robbed.

CLOWN. Bring him away, Jug : nay, you shall see the strangest piece of felony discovered that ever you saw, or your great grandmother's grandam before, or after ; a pirate, a water-thief.

WID. What's all this ?

CLOWN. Bring him away, Jug : yet the villain would not confess a word, till it was found about him.

WID. I think the fellow's mad.

CLOWN. Did you not lose your wedding-ring the other day ?

WID. Yes, sir, but I was not robbed of it.

Enter JOAN with a fish.

CLOWN. No ! well, thank him that brings it home then, and will ask nothing for his pains. You see this salmon ?

WID. Yes, what of it ?

CLOWN. It cost but sixpence : but had the fisher known the worth of it, 'twould have cost you forty shillings. Is not this your ring ?

WID. The very same.

CLOWN. Your maid Joan, examining this salmon, that she bought in the market, found that he had swallowed this gudgeon.

WID. How am I vex'd with blessings! how think you, sir,
Is not this above wonder?

DOC. I am amaz'd at it.

WID. First, that this fish should snatch it as a bait;

Then that my servant needs must buy that fish
'Mongst such infinities of fish and buyers:
What fate is mine that runs all by itself
In unhappy happiness? My conscience dreads it.
Would thou hadst not swallowed it, or thou not bought it.

CLOWN. Alas! blame not the poor fish, mistress: he, being a phlegmatic creature, took gold for restorative.¹ He took it fair; and he that gets gold, let him eat gold.

WID. Nothing can hinder fate.

DOC. Seek not to cross it, then.

WID. [To JOAN.] About your business! you have not pleased me in this.

JOAN. By my maidenhead! if I had thought you would have ta'en it no kindlier, you should ne'er have been vexed with [the] sight on't; the garbage should have been the cook's fees at this time.

[Exit JOAN.]

CLOWN. Now do I see the old proverb come to pass—Give a woman luck, and cast her into the sea: there's many a man would wish his wife good luck on that condition he might throw her away so. But, mistress, there's one within would speak with you, that vexeth as fast against crosses as you do against good luck.

WID. I know her sure, then; 'tis my gossip Foster.

Request her in; here's good company, tell her.

¹ Gold was formerly used in medicine, and many imaginary virtues ascribed to it.

CLOWN. I'll tell her so for my own credit's sake.

[Exit.]

WID. You shall now see an absolute contrary :
Would I had chang'd bosoms with her for a time :
'Twould make me better relish happiness.

Enter MISTRESS FOSTER and CLOWN.

MRS FOS. O friend and gossip, where are you ?

I am

O'erladen with my griefs, and but in your bosom
I know not where to ease me.

CLOWN. I had rather

Help you to a close-stool, an't please you. [Aside.]

MRS FOS. Ne'er had woman more sinister fate :
All ominous stars were in conjunction
Even at my birth, and do still attend me.

DOC. This is a perfect contrary indeed.

WID. What ails you, woman ?

MRS FOS. Unless seven witches had set spells about me,

I could not be so cross'd ; never at quiet,
Never [a] happy hour, not a minute's content.

DOC. You hurt yourself most with impatience.

MRS FOS. Ay, ay, physicians' minister with ease,
Although the patient do receive in pain :
Would I could think but of one joyful hour !

CLOWN. You have had two husbands to my knowledge ; and if you had not one joyful hour between both, I would you were hanged, i' faith.

[Aside.]

MRS FOS. Full fourteen years I liv'd a weary maid,

Thinking no joy till I had got a husband.

CLOWN. That was a tedious time indeed. [Aside.]

MRS FOS. I had one lov'd me well, and then ere long

I grew into my longing peevishness.

CLOWN. There was some pleasure ere you came to that. [Aside.]

MRS FOS. Then all the kindness that he would apply,

Nothing could please : soon after it he died.

CLOWN. That could be but little grief. [Aside.]

MRS FOS. Then worldly care did so o'erload my weakness,

That I must have a second stay ; I chose again,
And there begins my griefs to multiply.

WID. It cannot be, friend ; your husband's kind.

DOC. A man of fair condition, well-reputed.

CLOWN. But it may be he has not that should please her.

WID. Peace, sirrah ! How can your sorrows increase from him ?

MRS FOS. How can they but o'erwhelm me ?
He keeps a son,

That makes my state his prodigality ;
To him a brother, one of the city scandals.
The one the hand, the other is the maw ;
And between both my goods are swallowed up.
The full quantity that I brought amongst 'em
Is now consum'd to half.

WID. The fire of your spleen wastes it :
Good sooth, gossip, I could laugh at thee, and only grieve

I have not some cause of sorrow with thee :
Prythee, be temperate, and suffer.

DOC. 'Tis good counsel, mistress ; receive it so.

WID. Canst thou devise to lay them half on me ?
And I'll bear 'em willingly.

MRS FOS. Would I could ! that I might laugh another while :

But you are wise to heed at others' harms ;
You'll keep you happy in your widowhood.

WID. Not I, in good faith, were I sure marriage
Would make me unhappy.

MRS FOS. Try, try, you shall not need to wish ;
 You'll sing another song, and bear a part
 In my grief's descant, when you're vex'd at heart :
 Your second choice will differ from the first ;
 So oft as widows marry, they are accurs'd.

CLOWN. Ay, cursed widows are ; but if they had all stiff husbands to tame 'em, they'd be quiet enough.

WID. You'll be gone, sir, and see dinner ready.

CLOWN. I care not if I do, mistress, now my stomach's ready ;
 Yet I'll stay a little, an't be but to vex you.

WID. When go you, sirrah ?

CLOWN. I will not go yet.

WID. Ha, ha, ha ! thou makest me laugh at thee ; prythee, stay.

CLOWN. Nay, then, I'll go to vex you.

[Exit CLOWN.]

MRS FOS. You have a light heart, gossip.

WID. So should you, woman, would you be rul'd by me.

Come, we'll dine together ; after walk abroad
 Unto my suburb garden,¹ where, if thou'lt hear,
 I'll read my heart to thee, and thou from thence Shall learn to vex thy cares with patience.

[Exeunt.]

¹ These suburb gardens and garden-houses are constantly mentioned by the writers of that age. An extract from Stubba's "Anatomy of Abuas," 1585 (quoted by Mr Gifford in a note on "The Bondman"), will afford the reader some information: "In the suberbes of the citie, they [the women] have gardens either paled or walled round about very high, with their harbours and bowers fit for the purpose ; and lest they might be espied in these open places, they have their banqueting houses, with galleries, turrets, and what not, therein sumptuously erected, wherein they may, and doubtless do, many of them, play the filthy persons."

ACT II., SCENE 1.

Enter HOST BOXALL, STEPHEN, JACK, DICK, and HUGH.

HOST. Welcome still, my merchants of bona Speranza; what's your traffic, bullies? What ware deal you in?—cards, dice, bowls, or pigeon-holes? Sort 'em yourselves: either passage, Novem, or mumchance?¹ Say, my brave bursemen, what's your recreation?

STEPH. Dice, mine host. Is there no other room empty?

HOST. Not a hole unstopped in my house but this, my thrifts.

JACK. Miscall us not for our money, good mine host; we are none of your thrifts. We have 'scaped that scandal long ago.

DICK. Yes, his thrifts we are, Jack, though not our own.

HOST. Tush, you are young men; 'tis too soon to thrive yet. He that gathers young, spends when he's old. 'Tis better to begin ill and end well, than to begin well and end ill. Miserable fathers have, for the most part, unthrifty sons. Leave not too much for your heirs, boys.

JACK. He says well, i' faith: why should a man trust to executors?

STEPH. As good trust to hangmen as to executors. Who's in the bowling-alley, mine host?

HOST. Honest traders, thrifty lads, they are rubbing on't; towardly boys, every one strives to lie nearest the mistress.²

¹ Passage and Novem were games at dice, and mumchance one at cards. See Stevens's note on a passage in "Love's Labour Lost," act v.

² [The jack.]

STEPH. Give's a bale of dice.¹

HOST. Here, my brave wags.

STEPH. We fear no counters now, mine host, so long as we have your bale so ready.² Come, trip.

JACK. Up with's heels.

DICK. Down with them.

HUGH. Now the dice are mine; set me now a fair board; a fair passage, sweet bones! Boreas!³

[A noise below in the bowling-alley of betting and wrangling.

HOST. How now, my fine trundletails;⁴ my wooden cosmographers; my bowling-alley in an uproar? Is Orlando up in arms? I must be stickler; I am constable, justice, and beadle in mine own house; I accuse, sentence, and punish: have amongst you! look to my box, boys!⁵ He

¹ By a bale a pair of dice only is meant.

² Stephen puns on the words bale and bail.

³ It appears from an after-remark of Stephen's, that the game they were playing at was passage. Boreas may be a punning invocation to the north wind to assist him in his passage, or an allusion to the noise which arises at the same time in the bowling-alley.

⁴ The trundletail was a species of dog in little estimation, I believe; it is mentioned in the "Lear" of Shakespeare. So Ursula to Quar. in "Bartholomew Fair:" "Do you sneer, you dog's-head, you trundletail!" But here the host only puns on the rolling or trundling the bowl at the game.

⁵ The host was probably box-keeper or groom-porter; and it appears by an extract from the Monthly Mirror (quoted by Mr Gifford), that "if the caster throws three mains, or wins by throwing three times successively, he pays to the box-keeper, for the use of the house, a stipulated sum." It was probably these profits that the host directs them to look to; or that in our poet's time, or at a different game, a regular percentage might have been paid to the box-keeper on the money staked; or the host might have been banker, and staked against the players, as now at Rouge-et-Noir, and some other games, I believe.

that breaks the peace, I brake his pate for recompense : look to my box, I say ! [Exit.

STEPH. A pox o' your box ! I shall ne'er be so happy to reward it better ; set me fair ; aloft now. [The dice are thrown.

JACK. Out.

STEPH. What was't ?

DICK. Two treys and an ace.

STEPH. Seven still, pox on't ! that number of the deadly sins haunts me damnably. Come, sir, throw.

JACK. Prythee, invoke not so : all sinks too fast already.

HUGH. It will be found again in mine host's box. [The dice are thrown.

JACK. In still, two thieves and choose thy fellow.

STEPH. Take the miller.

JACK. Have at them, i' faith. [Throws.

HUGH. For a thief, I'll warrant you ; who'll you have next ?

JACK. Two quatres and a trey.

STEPH. I hope we shall have good cheer, when two caters and a tray go to the market.¹

Enter HOST.

HOST. So all's whist ; they play upon the still pipes now ; the bull-beggar² comes when I show my head. Silence is a virtue, and I have made 'em virtuous. Let 'em play still till they be penniless ; pawn till they be naked ; so they be quiet, ¹ It is perhaps unnecessary to notice that Stephen puns between the quatre and trey on the dice, and the cater or caterer who buys the provisions, and the tray in which it is brought home.

² [i.e., bogie. See "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," iii. 330.]

welcome and welcome. (A noise above at cards.)
 How now! how now! my roaring Tamberlain?
 take heed, the Soldan comes: and 'twere not for profit, who would live amongst such bears? Why, Ursa Major, I say, what, in Capite Draconis? is there no hope to reclaim you? shall I never live in quiet for you?

DICK. Good mine host, still 'em; civil gamesters cannot play for 'em.

HOST. I come amongst you, you maledictious slaves! I'll utter you all; some I'll take ready money for, and lay up the rest in the stocks: look to my box, I say!

STEPH. Your box is like your belly, mine host:
 it draws all. Now for a suit of apparel.

[Throws the dice.]

JACK. At whose suit, I pray? You're out again with the threes.

STEPH. Foot! I think my father threw three when I was begotten: pox on't! I know now why
 I am so haunted with threes.

JACK. Why, I prythee?

STEPH. I met the third part of a knave as I came.

JACK. The third part of a knave? 'sfoot! what thing's that?

STEPH. Why, a serjeant's yeoman, man; the supervisor himself is but a whole one, and he shares but a groat in the shilling with him.

DICK. That's but the third part indeed: but goes he no further?

STEPH. No, he rests there.

HUGH. Come, let's give o'er.

STEPH. I thank you, sir, and so much a loser?
 there's but the waistband of my suit left:¹ now, sweet bones!

¹ Stephen means, perhaps, that but one shilling was left of the forty his nephew had supplied him with.

HUGH. Twelve at all. [Throws.

STEPH. Soft, this die is false.

HUGH. False? you do him wrong, sir; he's true to his master.

STEPH. Fullam!

DICK. I'll be hanged, then! where's Putney, then, I pray you?¹

STEPH. 'Tis false, and I'll have my money again.

HUGH. You shall have cold iron with your silver, then.

STEPH. Ay, have at you, sir!

Enter HOST and YOUNG FOSTER.

HOST. I think he's here, sir.

[They draw their swords and fight. YOUNG FOSTER assists his uncle and the host, and the cheats are beaten. Whilst they are fighting, the bowlers enter and steal away their cloaks.

ROB. I am sure he's now, sir.

HUGH. Hold! hold! an' you be gentlemen, hold!

ROB. Get you gone, varlets, or there's hold to be taken!

HOST. Nay, sweet sir, no bloodshed in my house; I am lord of misrule; pray you, put up, sir.

OMNES. 'Sfoot! mine host, where are our cloaks?

HOST. Why, this is quarrelling: make after in time: some of your own crew, to try the weight, has lifted them: look out, I say.

¹ Fullam or Fulham was a well-known name for false dice. One of the cheats therefore sneeringly asks if one of the dice was Fulham, which of them was Putney, as Putney is on the Thames immediately opposite to Fulham.

JACK. There will ever be thieves in a dicing-house till thou be'st hanged, I'll warrant thee.

[Exit.]

STEPH. Mine host, my cloak was lined through with orange-tawny velvet.

HOST. How, your cloak? I ne'er knew thee worth one.

STEPH. You're a company of coneycatching rascals: is this a suit to walk without a cloak in?

ROB. Uncle, is this the reformation that you promised me?

STEPH. Coz, shall I tell thee the truth? I had diminished but sixpence of the forty shillings; by chance meeting with a friend, I went to a tailor, bargained for a suit: it came to full forty: I tendered my thirty-nine and a half, and (do you think) the scabby-wristed rascal would [not] trust me for sixpence!

ROB. Your credit is the better, uncle.

STEPH. Pox on him! if the tailor had been a man, I had had a fair suit on my back: so venturing for the other tester——

ROB. You lost the whole bedstead.¹

STEPH. But after this day, I protest, coz, you shall never see me handle those bones again; this day I break up school: if ever you call me unthrift after this day, you do me wrong.

ROB. I should be glad to wrong you so, uncle.

STEPH. And what says your father yet, coz?

ROB: I'll tell you that in your ear.

Enter MISTRESS FOSTER, WIDOW, and CLOWN.

MRS FOS. Nay, I pray you, friend, bear me company a little this way; for into this dicing-

¹ Robert puns on the word tester, which signifies the cover of a bed as well as a sixpence.

house I saw my good son-in-law enter, and 'tis odds but he meets his uncle here.

WID. You cannot tire me, gossip, in your company ; 'tis the best affliction I have to see you impatient.

MRS FOS. Ay, ay, you may make mirth of my sorrow.

CLOWN. We have hunted well, mistress ; do you not see the hare's in sight ?

MRS FOS. Did not I tell you so ? ay, ay, there's good counsel between you ; the one would go afoot to hell, the other the horseway.

ROB. Mother, I am sorry you have trod this path.

MRS FOS. Mother ? hang thee, wretch ! I bore thee not ;

But many afflictions I have borne for thee ;
Wert thou mine own, I'd see thee stretch'd (a handful),

And put thee a coffin into the cart
Ere thou shouldst vex me thus.

ROB. Were I your own,
You could not use me worse than you do.

MRS FOS. I'll make thy father turn thee out for ever,
Or else I'll make him wish him in his grave.
You'll witness with me, gossip, where I've found him.

CLOWN. Nay, I'll be sworn upon a book of calico for that.

ROB. It shall not need ; I'll not deny that I was with my uncle.

MRS FOS. And that shall disinherit thee, if thy father

Be an honest man : thou hadst been better
To have been born a viper, and eat thy way
Through thy mother's womb into the world,
Than to tempt my displeasure.

STEPH. Thou liest, Xantippe! it had been better Thou'dst been press'd to death under two Irish rugs,
 Than to ride honest Socrates, thy husband, thus,
 And abuse his honest child.

MRS FOS. Out, raggamuffin? dost thou talk? I shall see thee
 In Ludgate again shortly.

STEPH. Thou liest again: 'twill be at Moorgate, beldam, where I shall see thee in the ditch dancing in a cucking-stool.¹

MRS FOS. I'll see thee hanged first.

STEPH. Thou liest again.

CLOWN. Nay, sir, you do wrong to give a woman so many lies: she had rather have had twice so many standings than one lie.

MRS FOS. I'll lie with him, I'll warrant him.

STEPH. You'll be a whore, then.

CLOWN. Little less, I promise you, if you lie with him.

STEPH. If you complain upon mine honest coz,
 And that his father be offended with him,
 The next time I meet thee, though it be i' the street,
 I'll dance i' th' dirt upon thy velvet cap;
 Nay, worse, I'll stain thy ruff; nay, worse than
 that,
 I'll do thus. [Holds a wisp.²

¹ There was formerly a prison at Moorgate as well as at Ludgate; though Stephen means, I conceive, that the next time she would see him would be when attracted to that spot to see the operation of ducking performed on her as a scold. The ditch, as appears from Stow, was called deep ditch; but whether celebrated for exhibitions of this nature or not, I cannot say. It is mentioned in the "First Part of Henry IV."

² That a wisp was in some way made use of for the punishment or exposure of a scold, is evident from the notes on a

MRS FOS. O my heart, gossip, do you see this ?
Was ever

Woman thus abus'd !

WID. Methinks 'tis good sport, i' faith.

MRS FOS. Ay, I am well recompens'd to complain to you !

Had you such a kindred——

WID. I would rejoice in't, gossip.

MRS FOS. Do so ; choose here then. O my heart ! but I'll do your errand ! O that my nails were not pared ! but I'll do your errand ! Will you go, gossip ?

WID. No, I'll stay awhile, and tell 'em out with patience.

MRS FOS. I cannot hold a joint still ! Dost wisp me, thou tatterdemalion ? I'll do your errands ! if I have a husband. O that I could spit wildfire ! My heart ! O my heart ! if it does not go pantle, pantle, pantle in my belly, I am no honest woman : but I'll do your errands !

[Exit MISTRESS FOSTER.]

ROB. Kind gentlewoman, you have some patience.

WID. I have too much, sir.

ROB. You may do a good office, and make yourself a peaceful moderator betwixt me and my angry father, whom his wife hath moved to spleen against me.

WID. Sir, I do not disallow the kindness
Your consanguinity renders ; I would not teach
You otherwise : I'd speak with your uncle, sir,
If you'll give me leave.

passage in the "Third Part of Henry VI.," ii. 2. From the verses quoted by Malone, it seems probable that the wearing of the wisp was in some way connected with, or made part of, the ceremony of the skimmington. [See "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," ii. 128.]

CLOWN. [To ROBERT.] You may talk with me, sir, in the meantime. [Exit ROBERT and CLOWN.]

STEPH. With me would you talk, gentlewoman?

WID. Yes, sir, with you: you are a brave unthrift.

STEPH. Not very brave neither, yet I make a shift.

WID. When you have a clean shirt.

STEPH. I'll be no pupil to a woman. Leave your discipline.

WID. Nay, pray you, hear me, sir, I cannot chide;

I'll but give you good counsel: 'tis not a good Course that you run.

STEPH. Yet I must run to th' end of it.

WID. I would teach you a better, if you'd stay where you are.

STEPH. I would stay where I am, if I had any money.

WID. In the dicing-house?

STEPH. I think so too; I have played at passage all this while, now I'd go to hazard.

WID. Dost thou want money? Thou art worthy to be tattered! Hast thou no wit, now thy money's gone?

STEPH. 'Tis all the portion I have. I have nothing to maintain me but my wit; my money is too little, I'm sure.

WID. I cannot believe thy wit's more than thy money—a fellow so well-limbed, so able to do good service, and want?

STEPH. Why, mistress, my shoulders were not made for a frock and a basket, nor a coal-sack; no, nor my hands to turn a trencher at a table's side.

WID. I like that resolution well; but how comes it then that thy wit leaves thy body unfurnished? Thou art very poor!

STEPH. The fortune of the dice, you see.

WID. They are the only wizards, I confess,
The only fortune-tellers; but he that goes
To seek his fortune from them must never hope
To have a good destiny allotted him.
Yet it is not the course that I dislike in thee,
But that thou canst not supply that course,
And outcross them that cross thee: were I as thou art——

STEPH. You'd be as beggarly as I am.

WID. I'll be hanged first.

STEPH. Nay, you must be well hanged ere you can be as I am.

WID. So, sir: I conceit you. Were I as well hanged, then, as you could imagine, I would tell some rich widow such a tale in her ear——

STEPH. Ha! some rich widow? By this penniless pocket, I think 'twere not the worst way.

WID. I'd be ashamed to take such a fruitless oath. I say, seek me out some rich widow; promise her fair—she's apt to believe a young man. Marry her, and let her estate fly. No matter: 'tis charity. Twenty to one some rich miser raked it together. This is none of Hercules' labours.

STEPH. Ha? Let me recount these articles:
seek her out; promise her fair; marry her; let her estate fly. But where should I find her?

WID. The easiest of all. Why, man, they are more common than tavern-bushes; two fairs might be furnished every week in London with 'em, though no foreigners came in, if the charter were granted once: nay, 'tis thought, if the horse-market be removed, that Smithfield shall be so employed; and then, I'll warrant you, 'twill be as well furnished with widows as 'twas with sows, cows, and old trotting jades before.

STEPH. 'Sfoot! if it were, I would be a chapman ; I'd see for my pleasure, and buy for my love, for money I have none.

WID. Thou shalt not stay the market, if thou'lt be ruled. I'll find thee out a widow, and help in some of the rest too, if thou'lt but promise me the last, but to let her estate fly ; for she's one I love not, and I'd be glad to see that revenge on her.

STEPH. Spend her estate ? were't five aldermen's. I'll put you in security for that ; 'sfoot ! all my neighbours shall be bound for me ; nay, my kind sister-in-law shall pass her word for that.

WID. Only this I'll enjoin you : to be matrimonially honest to her for your own health's sake. All other injuries shall be blessings to her.

STEPH. I'll bless her, then ; I ever drank so much, that I was never great feeder. Give me drink and my pleasure, and a little flesh serves my turn.

WID. I'll show thee the party. What sayest thou to myself ?

STEPH. Yourself, gentlewoman ? I would it were no worse. I have heard you reputed a rich widow.

WID. I have a lease of thousands at least, sir.

STEPH. I'll let out your leases for you, if you'll allow me the power, I'll warrant you.

WID. That's my hope, sir ; but you must be honest withal.

STEPH. I'll be honest with some ; if I can be honest with all, I will too.

WID. Give me thy hand ; go home with me, I'll give thee better clothes ; and, as I like thee then, we'll go further ; we may chance make a blind bargain of it.

STEPH. I can make no blind bargain, unless I be in your bed, widow.

WID. No, I bar that, sir ; let's begin honestly, howe'er we end : marry, for the waste of my estate, spare it not ; do thy worst.

STEPH. I'll do bad enough, fear it not.

WID. Come, will you walk, sir ?

STEPH. No, widow, I'll stand to no hazard of blind bargains ; either promise me marriage, and give me earnest in a handfast, or I'll not budge a foot.

WID. No, sir ? are you grown so stout already ?

STEPH. I'll grow stouter when I'm married.

WID. I hope thou'lt vex me.

STEPH. I'll give you cause, I'll warrant you.

WID. I shall rail and curse thee, I hope ; yet I'd not have thee give over neither ; for I would be vexed. Here's my hand ! I am thine, thou art mine : I'll have thee with all faults.

STEPH. You shall have one with some, an' you have me.

Enter ROBERT and CLOWN.

WID. Here's witness[es]. [To ROBERT.] Come hither, sir—cousin I must call you shortly ; and you, sirrah, be witness to this match ; here's man and wife.

ROB. I joy at mine uncle's happiness, widow.

CLOWN. I do forbid the banns : alas ! poor shag-rag, my mistress does but gull him. [To STEPHEN.] You may imagine it to be twelfth-day at night, and the bean found in the corner of your cake, but 'tis not worth a vetch, I'll assure you.¹

¹ The clown alludes to the then manner of choosing the king and queen 'on Twelfth Day,' which was as follows. With the ingredients of which the cake or cakes, for there was probably one for each sex, were composed, a bean and pea were mixed up, and the two persons who were so fortunate as to find these in their respective portions were declared

WID. You'll let me dispose of myself, I hope?

CLOWN. You love to be merry, mistress : come, come, give him four farthings, and let him go: he'll pray for his good dame, and be drunk. Why, if your blood does itch that way, we'll stand together. [Places himself by the side of STEPHEN.] How think you? I think here is the sweeter bit [Pointing to himself]; you see this nit,¹ and you see this louse! you may crack o' your choice, if you choose here.

WID. You have put me to my choice, then; see, here I choose : this is my husband; thus I begin the contract. [Kisses STEPHEN.]

STEPH. 'Tis seal'd; I am thine. Now, coz, fear no black storms : if thy father thunder, come to me for shelter.

WID. His word is now a deed, sir.

ROB. I thank you both. Uncle, what my joy conceives, I cannot utter yet.

CLOWN. I will make black Monday of this! ere I suffer this disgrace, the kennel shall run with blood and rags.

ROB. Sir, I am your opposite.

CLOWN. I have nothing to say to you, sir; I aim at your uncle.

king and queen for the night. Thus in Herrick's "Hesperides"—

"Now, now, the mirth comes,
With the cake full of plums,
Where beon's the king of the sport here;
Besides we must know,
The pea also
Must revel, as queen, in the court here."

This method of election, which we find referred to as early as Edward III., was common at the beginning of the sixteenth century to both our universities: The curious reader will collect further information on the subject from ["Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," 1870, i. 13 et seq.]

¹ The 4^o reads nap; and I am not certain of the propriety of the alteration, as the Clown may allude to Stephen's dress.

ROB. He has no weapon.

CLOWN. That's all one, I'll take him as I find him.

WID. I have taken him so before you, sir: will you be quiet?

STEPH. Thou shalt take me so too, Hodge, for I'll be thy fellow, though thy mistress's husband. Give me thy hand.

[Exeunt WIDOW, STEPHEN, and ROBERT.]

CLOWN. I'll make you seek your fingers among the dogs, if you come to me. My fellow? You lousy companion, I scorn thee. 'Sfoot! is't come to this? Have I stood all this while to my mistress an honest, handsome, plain-dealing serving-creature, and she to marry a whoreson tityre tu tattere with never a good rag about him? [Draws his sword, and puts his cap on the point of it.] Stand thou to me, and be my friend; and since my mistress has forsaken me——

Enter ROBERT.

ROB. How now? what's the matter?

CLOWN. 'Twas well you came in good time.

ROB. Why, man?

CLOWN. I was going the wrong way.

ROB. But tell me one thing I apprehend not: why didst lay thy cap upon the sword's point?

CLOWN. Dost not thou know the reason of that? why, 'twas to save my belly: dost thou think I am so mad to cast myself away for e'er a woman of 'em all? I'll see 'em hanged first!

ROB. Come, Roger, will you go?

CLOWN. Well, since there is no remedy. O tears! be you my friend.

ROB. Nay, prythee, Roger, do not cry.

CLOWN. I cannot choose; nay, I will steep Mine eyes in crying tears, and crying weep. [Exeunt.]

ACT III., SCENE 1.

Enter ALDERMAN BREWEN, SIR GODFREY SPEEDWELL, INNOCENT LAMBSKIN, and MISTRESS JANE.

BREW. Gentlemen, you're welcome; that once well-pronounced has a thousand echoes. Let it suffice, I have spoke it to the full. Here's your affairs, here's your merchandise—this is your prize. [Pointing to JANE.]

If you can mix your names and gentle bloods
With the poor daughter of a citizen,
I make the passage free, to greet and court,
Traffic the mart of love, clap hands, and strike
The bargain through; she pleas'd, and I shall like.

SPEED. 'Tis good ware, believe me, sir: I know that by mine own experience, for I have handled the like many times in my first wife's days. Ay, by knighthood! sometimes before I was married, too; therefore I know't by mine own experience.

LAMB. Well, sir, I know by observation as much as you do by experience; for I have known many gentlemen have taken up such ware as this is, but it has lain on their hands as long as they lived. This I have seen by observation.

JANE. [Aside.] I am like to have a couple of fair chapmen. If they were at my own dispose, I would willingly raffle them both at twelvecpence a share. They would be good food for a new plantation. The one might mend his experience, and the other his observation very much.¹

SPEED. Sir, let me advise you; I see you want

¹ [There were several works published about this time containing the results of the various writers' experiences and observations in the new plantations in America.]

experience. Meddle no further in this case; 'twill be the more credit for your observation, for I find by my experience you are but shallow.

LAMB. But shallow, sir? Your experience is a little wide; you shall find I will be as deep in this case as yourself. My observation has been where your experience must wait at door; yet I will give you the fore-horse place, and I will be in the thills,¹ because you are the elder tree, and I the young plant. Put on your experience, and I will observe.

SPEED. Sweet virgin, to be prolix and tedious fits not experience. Short words and large deeds are best pleasing to women.

JANE. So, sir.

SPEED. My name is Speedwell by my father's copy.

JANE. Then you never served for't, it seems.²

SPEED. Yes, sweet feminine! I have served for it too; for I found my nativity suited to my name. As my name is Speedwell, so have I sped well in divers actions.

JANE. It must needs be a fair and comely suit, then.

LAMB. You observe very well, sweet virgin; for his nativity is his doublet, which is the upper part of his suit; and his name is in's breeches, for that part, which is his name, he defiles many times.

SPEED. Your observation is corrupt, sir. Let me show mine own tale. I say, sweet beauty, my name is Speedwell. My godfather, by his bounty (being an old soldier, and having served in the wars as far as Boulogne) therefore called my name Godfrey, a title of large renown.¹ My wealth and wit has added to those the paraphrase of knighthood, so that my name in the full longitude is called Sir Godfrey Speedwell, a name of good experience.

¹ [Shafts.]

² You acquired citizenship in right of your father, and without personal service.]

JANE. If every quality you have be as large in relation as your name, sir, I should imagine the best of them, rather than hear them reported.

SPEED. You say well, sweet modesty; a good imagination is good, and shows your good experience.

LAMB. Nay, if names can do any good, I beseech you observe mine. My name is Lambskin, a thing both hot and harmless.

JANE. On, sir; I would not interrupt you, because you should be brief.

LAMB. My godfather, seeing in my face some notes of disposition, in my cradle did give me the title of Innocent,² which I have practised all my lifetime; and since my father's decease, my wealth has purchased me in the vanguard of my name the paraphrase of gentility, so that I am called Master Innocent Lambskin.

JANE. In good time: and what trade was your father, sir?

LAMB. My father was of an occupation before he was a tradesman; for, as I have observed in my father's and mother's report, they set up together in their youth. My father was a starch-maker, and my mother a laundress; so, being partners, they did occupy³ long together before they were married; then was I born.

¹ An allusion to Godfrey of Boulogne or Bulloigne.

² Innocent; it must be remembered, in the language of our old dramatic writers, denotes an idiot.

³ [Enjoy, in the sense of a man having knowledge of a woman.] Doll Tearsheet says of Pistol, in the "Second Part of Henry IV.," "These villains will make the word

JANE. What, before your father was married ?

LAMB. Truly a little after. I was the firstfruits, as they say. Then did my father change his copy, and set up a brewhouse.

JANE. Ay, then came your wealth in, sir.

LAMB. Your observation's good. I have carried the tallies¹ at my girdle seven year together with much delight and observation, for I did ever love to deal honestly in the nick.

JANE. A very innocent resolution.

SPEED. Your experience may see his coarse education ; but to the purpose, sweet female. I do love that face of yours.

JANE. Sir, if you love nothing but my face, I cannot sell it from the rest.

LAMB. You may see his slender observation. Sweet virgin, I do love your lower parts better than your face.

SPEED. Sir, you do interrupt and thwart my love.

LAMB. Ay, sir, I am your rival, and I will thwart your love ; for your love licks at the face, and my love shall be arsy-versy to yours.

JANE. I would desire no better wooing of so bad suitors.

STEPH. Mistake me not, kind-heart.

captain as odious as the word occupy, which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted." [See Nares, edit. 1859, in v. ; and Percy Folio MS. ("Loose and Humorous Songs," p. 29.)]

¹ "Tallies," says Johnson, "are sticks cut in conformity to others, by which accounts were kept." Jack Cade reproaches the Lord Say, "with having caused printing to be used, whereas before no other books were made use of by their forefathers but the score and tally. And Cade has the Exchequer Office on his side, where accounts are still partially kept after this most barbarous fashion."

LAMB. He calls you tooth-drawer by way of experience.¹

SPEED. In loving your face, I love all the rest of your body, as you shall find by experience.

JANE. Well, sir, you love me, then ?

SPEED. Let your experience make a trial.

JANE. No, sir, I'll believe you rather, and I thank you for't.

LAMB. I love you too, fair maid, double and treble, if it please you.

JANE. I thank you too, sir ; I am so much beholding to you both, I am afraid I shall never requite it.

SPEED. Requite one, sweet chastity, and let it be Sir Godfrey, with the correspondency of your love to him. I will maintain you like a lady ; and it is brave, as I know by experience.

LAMB. I will maintain you like a gentlewoman : and that may be better maintenance than a lady's, as I have found by observation.

¹ [The name of a tooth-drawer, real or imaginary, who attended fairs. In 1592 Chettle printed his tract called "Kindhart's Dream." Dilke observes : "I am inclined to think, however, that kind-heart was the 'travelling name' of some notorious quack tooth-drawer, or a cant name given to the whole race of them. So the stage-keeper, in the induction to 'Bartholomew Fair,' when expressing his fear of the author's success, says : 'He has ne'er a sword-and-buckler man in his fair, nor a little Davy, to take toll of the bawds there, as in my time ; nor a kind-heart, if anybody's teeth should chance to ake in his play.' And further, it is part of the 'covenant and agreement,' in the same induction, that the audience shall not 'look back to the sword-and-buckler age of Smithfield, but content themselves with the present. Instead of a little Davy, to take toll of the bawds, the author doth promise a strutting horse-courser, with a leer drunkard, two or three to attend him in as good equipage as you would wish. And then for kind-heart the tooth-drawer, a fine oily pig-woman, with," &c., &c. [Lambkin's reply is obviously allusive to the name by which Stephen has just addressed the widow.]

SPEED. How dare you maintain that, sir?

LAMB. I dare maintain it with my purse, sir.

SPEED. I dare cross it with my sword, sir.

[Lays his hand on his sword.]

LAMB. If you dare cross my purse with your sword, sir, I'll lay an action of suspicion of felony to you; that's flat, sir.

JANE. Nay, pray you, gentlemen, do not quarrel till you know for what.

BREW. O, no quarrelling. I beseech you, gentlemen! the reputation of my house is soiled if any uncivil noise arise in't.

LAMB. Let him but shake his blade at me, and I'll throw down my purse and cry a rape; I scorn to kill him, but I'll hang his knighthood, I warrant him, if he offer assault and battery on my purse.

BREW. Nay, good sir, put up your sword.

SPEED. You have confined him prisoner for ever: I hope your experience sees he's a harmless thing.

Enter GEORGE.

GEORGE. Sir, here's young Master Foster requests to speak with you.

BREW. Does he? Prythee, request him. [in.] Gentlemen, please you taste the sweetness of my garden awhile, and let my daughter bear you company.

SPEED. Where she is leader, there will be followers.

JANE. [Aside to her father.] You send me to the galleys, sir; pray you, redeem me as soon as you can: these are pretty things for mirth, but not for serious uses.

BREW. Prythee, be merry with them then awhile, if but for courtesy; thou hast wit enough: but take heed they quarrel not.

JANE. Nay, I dare take in hand to part 'em without any danger; but I beseech you, let me not be too long a prisoner. Will you walk, gentlemen.

LAMB. If it please you to place one of us for your conduct, otherwise this old coxcomb and I shall quarrel.

JANE. Sir Godfrey, you are the eldest; pray, lead the way.

SPEED. With all my heart, sweet virgin. [Aside.] Ah! ah! this place promises well in the eyes of experience. Master Innocent, come you behind.

LAMB. Right, sir; but I put the gentlewoman before, and that is the thing I desire; and there your experience halts a little.

SPEED. When I look back, sir, I see your nose behind.

LAMB. Then when I look back your nose stands here.

SPEED. Sweet lady, follow experience.

LAMB. And let observation follow you. [Exeunt.]

BREW. So: now request you Master Foster in, George; but hark! does that news hold his own still, that our ships are so near return, as laden on the Downs with such a wealthy fraughtage?

GEORGE. Yes, sir, and the next tide [do] purpose to Put into the river. Master Foster, your partner, Hath now receiv'd more such intelligence, with Most o' the particulars of your merchandise; Your venture is return'd with treble blessings.

BREW. Let him be ever blessed that sent [it]! George, now call in the young man; and hark ye, George, from him run to my partner, and request him to me. This news, I'm sure, makes him a joyful merchant; for my own part, I'll not forget my vow. [Exit GEORGE.]

This free addition heaven hath lent my state,
As freely back to heaven I'll dedicate.

Enter ROBERT FOSTER.

Ay, marry, sir, would this were a third suitor to My daughter Jane! I should better like him than All that's come yet. Now, Master Foster, are Your father and yourself yet reconcil'd?

ROB. Sir, 'twas my business in your courteous tongue

To put the arbitration. I have again
(Discover'd by my mother) reliev'd my poor uncle;
Whose anger now so great is multiplied,
I dare not venture in the eye of either,
Till your persuasions [shall] with fair excuse
Have made my satisfaction.

BREW. Mother-o'-pearl! sir, 'tis a shrewd task;
Yet I'll do my best: your father hath so good news,

That I hope 'twill be a fair motive to't;
But women's tongues are dangerous stumbling-blocks

To lie in the way of peace.

Enter GEORGE.

Now, George?

GEORGE. Master Foster's coming, sir.

ROB. I beseech you, sir, let not me see him
Till you have conferr'd with him.

BREW. Well, well! [To GEORGE.] Ere your return to Master Foster, call my daughter forth of the garden. [Exit GEORGE.]

And how does your uncle, Master Foster?

ROB. Sir, so well,
I'd be loth to anticipate the fame
That shortly will o'erspread the city
Of his good fortunes.

BREW. Why, I commend thee still;
He wants no good from thee—no, not in report:
'Tis well done, sir, and you show duty in't.

Enter JANE.

Now, daughter, where are your lusty suitors ?

JANE. I was glad of my release, sir. Suitors call you 'em? I'd keep dish-water continually boiling, but I'd seethe such suitors: I have had much ado to keep 'em from bloodshed. I have seen for all the world a couple of cowardly curs quarrel in that fashion; as the one turns his head, the other snaps behind; and as he turns, his mouth recoils again: but I thank my pains for't, I have leagued with 'em for a week without any further intercourse.

BREW. Well, daughter, well; say a third trouble come; say in the person of young Master Foster here came a third suitor: how then?

JANE. Three's the woman's total arithmetic: indeed I would learn to number no farther, if there was a good account made of that.

ROB. I can instruct you so far, sweet beauty.

JANE. Take heed, sir; I have had ill-handsel to-day; perhaps 'tis not the fortunate season; you were best adjourn your journey to some happier time.

ROB. There shall no augurism fright my plain dealing: sweet, I fear no hours.

JANE. You'll not betray me with love-powder?

ROB. Nor with gunpowder neither, i' faith; yet I'll make you yield, if I can.

BREW. Go, get you together; your father will be coming; leave me with your suit to him, ply this yourself: and, Jane, use him kindly; he shall be his father's heir, I can tell you.

JANE. Never the more for that, father; if I use him kindly, it shall be for something I like in himself, and not for any good he borrows of his father. But come, sir, will you walk into the garden? for that's the field I have best fortune to overcome my suitors in.

ROB. I fear not that fate neither ; but if I walk into your garden, I shall be tasting your sweets.

JANE. Taste sweetly, and welcome, sir ; for there grows honesty, I can tell you.

ROB. I shall be plucking at your honesty.

JANE. By my honesty, but you shall not, sir : I'll hold you a handful of pennyroyal of that ; i' faith, if you touch my honesty there, I'll make you eat sorrel to your supper, though I eat sullenwood¹ myself : no, sir, gather first time and sage, and such wholesome herbs, and honesty and heart's-ease will ripen the whilst.

ROB. You have fair roses, have you not

JANE. Yes, sir, roses ; but no gilliflowers.²

¹ The artemisia or southern wood is meant.

² Jane has been too successful in her play on the names and qualities of the flowers to have chosen this at random ; and I am inclined to think the following extract from the "Winter's Tale" will serve to elucidate her meaning—

"The fairest flowers o' the season
Are our carnations and streak'd gilliflowers,
Which some call nature's bastards : of that kind
Our rustic garden's barren ; and I care not
To get slips of them.

POL. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect them ?

FR. For I have heard it said,
There is an art, which, in their piddness, shares
With great creating nature."

"This art," says Steevens, in a note on that passage, "is pretended to be taught at the end of some of the old books that treat of cookery." As I understand the passage then, Jane means to say, I have such good qualities and beauty as nature has given, but none that are produced by art. If the passage be thus understood, the opposition of the rose and the gilliflower is complete. If the reader is not satisfied with this conjecture, I will further suggest that gill-flirt was then a well-known term for a wanton ; and Steevens has informed us that gillyvors (the vulgar way of calling gilly-flowers) is still in use in Sussex to denote a harlot. Jane has spoken more than once of her honesty, and here may be the allusion.

BREW. Go, go, and rest on Venus' violets :
Show her a dozen of bachelor's buttons, boy.

[Exit ROBERT and JANE.

Here comes his father.

Enter OLD MASTER FOSTER and his WIFE.

Now, my kind partner, have we good news ?

O. FOS. Sir, in a word take it : your full lading
And venture is return'd at sixtyfold increase.

BREW. Heaven take the glory ! a wondrous blessing ;

O, keep us strong against these flowing tides !
Man is too weak to bound himself below,
When such high waves do mount him.

O. FOS. O, sir, care and ambition seldom meet ;
Let us be thrifty ; titles will faster come,
Than we shall wish to have them.

BREW. Faith, I desire none.

O. FOS. Why, sir, if so you please, I'll ease your cares ;

Shall I, like a full adventurer, now bid you
A certain ready sum for your half traffic.

BREW. Ay, and I'd make you gainer by it, too ;
For then would I lay by my trouble, and begin
A work which I have promis'd unto heaven ;
A house, a Domus Dei shall be rais'd,
Which shall to doomsday be established
For succour to the poor ; for in all ages
There must be such.

O. FOS. Shall I bid your venture at a venture ?

BREW. Pray you, do, sir.

O. FOS. Twenty thousand pounds ?

BREW. Nay, then you underrate your own value much : will you make it thirty ?

O. FOS. Shall I meet you half-way ?

BREW. I meet you there, sir : for five-and-twenty thousand pounds the full venture's yours.

O. FOS. If you like my payment, 'tis the one-half in ready cash, the other seal'd for six months.

BREW. 'Tis merchant-like and fair. George, you observe this? Let the contents be drawn.

GEORGE. They shall, sir.

O. FOS. Your hazard is now all pass'd, sir.

BREW. I rejoice at it, sir, and shall not grudge your gains,

Though multiplied to thousands.

O. FOS. Believe me, sir, I account myself a large gainer by you.

BREW. Much good may it be to you, sir : but one thing

At this advantage of my love to you

Let me entreat.

O. FOS. What is it, sir?

BREW. Faith, my old suit—to reconcile those breaches

'Twixt your kind son and you : let not the love

He shows unto his uncle be any more a bar

To sunder your blessings and his duty.

O. FOS. I would you had enjoin'd me some great labour

For your own love's sake : but to that my vow

Stands fix'd against ; I'm deaf, obdurate

To either of them.

MRS FOS. Nay, sir, if you knew all,

You would not waste your words in so vain expense :

Since his last reformation, he has flown

Out again, and in my sight relieved

His uncle in the dicing-house ; for which

Either he shall be no father to him,

Or no husband to me.

BREW. Well, sir, go call my daughter forth of the garden, and bid her bring her friend along with her : troth, sir, I must not leave you thus ;

I must needs make him your son again.

O. FOS. Sir, I have no such thing akin to me.

Enter ROBERT ; ROBERT kneels to his father.

BREW. Look you, sir, know you this duty ?

O. FOS. Not I, sir ; he's a stranger to me.
Save your knee ; I have no blessing for you.

MRS FOS. Go, go to your uncle, sir ; you know where to find him ; he's at his old haunt ; he wants more money by this time ; but I think the conduit-pipe is stopped from whence it ran.

O. FOS. Did he not say he'd beg for you ? you'd best make use of's bounty.

BREW. Nay, good sir.

O. FOS. Sir, if your daughter cast any eye of favour upon this unthrift, restrain't, he's a beggar. Mistress Jane, take heed what you do.

MRS FOS. Ay, ay, be wise, Mistress Jane ; do not you trust to spleen in time worn to pity,¹ you'll not find it so ; therefore, good gentlewoman, take heed.

BREW. Nay, then, you are too impenetrable.

O. FOS. Sir, your money shall be ready, and your bills ; other business I have none.

[To ROB.] For thee, beg, hang, die like a slave ;
Such blessings ever thou from me shalt have.

[Exit FOSTER and his WIFE.]

BREW. Well, sir, I'll follow you. [To ROBERT.]

And, sir, be comforted,

I will not leave, till I find some remorse ;

Meantime let not want trouble you ;

You shall not know it.

ROB. Sir, 'tis not want I fear, but want of blessing

My knee was bent for ; for mine uncle's state,

Which now (I daresay) outweighs my father's far,

¹ [Old copy, and.]

Confirms my hopes as rich as with my father's,
His love excepted only.

BREW. Thy uncle's state ! how, for heaven's love ?

ROB. By his late marriage to the wealthiest widow

That London had ; who has not only made him
Lord of herself, but of her whole estate.

BREW. Mother-o'-pearl ! I rejoice in't : this news
Is yet but young.

ROB. Fame will soon speak it loud, sir.

BREW. This may help happily to make all peace :
But how, have you parley'd with my daughter, sir ?

[Enter JANE.]

JANE. Very well, father ; we spake something, but did nothing at all : I requested him to pull me a Catherine pear, and had I not looked to him, he would have mistook and given me a poperin :
and to requite his kindness I plucked him a rose, and had almost pricked my finger for my pains.

BREW. Well-said, wag ; are there sparks kindled ?
Quench 'em not for me : 'tis not a father's roughness,
Nor doubtful hazard of an uncle's kindness
Can me deter. I must to your father ;
Where (as a chief affair) I'll once more move,
And (if I can) return him back to love. [Exeunt.]

Enter DOCTOR and STEPHEN'S WIFE.

WIFE. Sir, you see I have made a speedy choice
And as swift a marriage : be it as it will,
I like the man : if his qualities afflict me,
I shall be happy in't.

DOC. I must not distaste what I have help'd to make ;

'Tis I that join'd you.

WIFE. A good bargain, I hope.

Enter CLOWN.

Roger, where's your master ?

CLOWN. The good man of the house is within, forsooth.

WIFE. Not your master, sir ?

CLOWN. 'Tis hard of digestion. Yes, my master is within. He masters you ; therefore I must be content. You have longed for crosses a good while, and now you are like to be farther off them than e'er you were ; for I'm afraid your good husband will leave you ne'er a cross i' th' house to bless you with.

WIFE. Well, sir, I shall be bless'd in't. But where is he ?

CLOWN. Where he has mistaken the place a little, being his wedding-day ; he is in nomine, when he should be in re.

WIFE. And where's that ?

CLOWN. In your counting-house : if he were a kind husband, he would have been in another counting-house by this time : he's tumbling over all his money-bags yonder ; you shall hear of him in the bowling-alley again.

WIFE. Why, sir, all is his, and at his dispose ; Who shall dare to thwart him ?

Enter STEPHEN with bills and bonds.

CLOWN. Look where he comes.

WIFE. How now, sweetheart ? what hast thou there ?

STEPH. I find much debts belonging to you, sweet ;

And my care must be now to fetch them in.

WIFE. Ha, ha ! prythee, do not mistake thyself, Nor my true purpose ; I did not wed to thrall, Or bind thy large expense, but rather to add

A plenty to that liberty. I thought by this,
 Thou wouldst have stuff'd thy pockets full of gold,
 And thrown it at a hazard; made ducks and drakes,

And baited fishes with thy silver flies;
 Lost, and fetch'd more: why, this had been my joy!

Perhaps at length thou wouldst have wasted my store:

Why, this had been a blessing too good for me.

STEPH. Content thee, sweet, those days are gone—

Ay, even from my memory;
 I have forgot that e'er I had such follies,
 And I'll not call 'em back: my cares¹ are bent
 To keep your state, and give you all content.
 Roger, go, call your fellow-servants up to me,
 And to my chamber bring all books of debt;
 I will o'erlook and cast up all accounts,
 That I may know the weight of all my cares,
 And once a year give up my stewardship.

CLOWN. [Aside to the WIFE.] Now you may see what hasty matching is. You had thought to have been vexed, and now you cannot; you have married a husband, that (sir reverence of the title) now being my master-in-law, I do think he'll prove the miserablest covetous rascal that ever beat beggar from his gate. But 'tis no matter. Time was when you were fairly offered, if you would have took it. You might have had other matches, i' faith, if it had pleased you; and those that would have crossed you. I would have sold away all that ever you had had; have kept two or three whores at livery under your nose; have turned you out in your smock, and have used you like a woman:
 whereas now, if you'd hang yourself, you can have

¹ [The 4^o reads cares.]

none of these blessings. But 'tis well enough—now you must take what follows.

WIFE. I'm to new-¹ seek for crosses : the hopes
I meant
Turn to despair, and smother in content.

Enter ROBERT.

STEPH. O nephew, are you come ! the welcom'st wish

That my heart has ; this is my kinsman, sweet.

WIFE. Let him be largely texted in your love,
That all the city may read it fairly ;
You cannot remember me, and him forget :
We were alike to you in poverty.

STEPH. I should have begg'd that bounty of your
love,
Though you had scanted me to have given't him ;
For we are one : I an uncle-nephew,
He a nephew-uncle. But, my sweet self,
My slow request you have anticipated
With proffer'd kindness ; and I thank you for it.
But how, kind cousin, does your father use you ?
Is your name found again within his books ?
Can he read son there ?

ROB. 'Tis now blotted quite :
For by the violent instigation
Of my cruel stepmother, his vows and oaths
Are stamp'd against me, ne'er to acknowledge me,
Never to call or bless me as a child ;
But in his brow, his bounty and behaviour
I read it all most plainly.

STEPH. Cousin, grieve
Not at it ; that father, lost at home, you shall Find here ; and with the loss of his inheritance,

¹ [Old copy, new to.]

You meet another amply proffer'd you ;
 Be my adopted son, no more my kinsman :
 [To his WIFE.] So that this borrowed bounty do not stray
 From your consent.

WIFE. Call it not borrow'd, sir ; 'tis all your own ;

Here 'fore this reverend man I make it known,
 Thou art our child as free by adoption,
 As deriv'd from us by conception,
 Birth, and propinquity ; inheritor
 To our full substance.

ROB. You were born
 To bless us both ; my knee shall practise
 A son's duty even beneath [a] son's ;
 Giving you all the comely dues of parents ; yet
 Not forgetting my duty to my father :
 Where'er I meet him, he shall have my knee,
 Although his blessing ne'er return to me.

STEPH. Come then, my dearest son, I'll now give
 thee

A taste of my love to thee : be thou my deputy,
 The factor and disposer of my business ;
 Keep my accounts, and order my affairs ;
 They must be all your own : for you, dear sweet,
 Be merry, take your pleasure at home—abroad ;
 Visit your neighbours—ought that may seem good

To your own will ; down to the country ride ;
 For cares and troubles, lay them all aside,
 And I will take them up : it's fit that weight
 Should now lie all on me : take thou the height
 Of quiet and content : let nothing grieve thee.
 I brought thee nothing else, and that I'll give thee.

[Exit STEPHEN and ROBERT.]

WIFE. Will the tide never turn ? Was ever woman
 Thus burden'd with unhappy happiness ?

Did I from riot take him to waste my goods,
And he strives to augment it? I did mistake him.

DOC. Spoil not a good text with a false comment;

All these are blessings, and from heaven sent;
It is your husband's good; he's now transform'd
To a better shade; the prodigal's return'd.

Come, come, know joy, make not abundance scant;

You 'plain of that which thousand women want.

[Exeunt.]

Enter BREWEN and OLD FOSTER; GEORGE and RICHARD follow them, carrying several bags of money across the stage.

BREW. So, so,

Haste home, good lads, and return for the rest.
Would they were cover'd, George; 'tis too public
Blazon of my estate; but 'tis no matter now;
I'll bring it abroad again, ere it be long.

Sir, I acknowledge receipt of my full half debt, Twelve thousand five hundred pounds; it now remains

You seal those writings as assurance for the rest,
And I am satisfied for this time.

O. FOS. Pray stay, sir, I have bethought me:
let me once

Throw dice at all, and either be a complete
Merchant, or wrack my estate for ever:
Hear me, sir; I have of wares, that are now ven-dible,

So much as will defray your utmost penny;
Will you accept of them, and save this charge
Of wax and parchment?

BREW. Be they vendible, sir, I am your chapman:

What are they, Master Foster?

O. FOS. Broadcloths, kerseys, cochineal, such as will not stay two days upon your hands.

BREW. I find your purpose ; you'd have your warehouses empty for the receipt of your full fraught : I'll be your furtherer ; make so your rates that I may be no loser.

Enter GEORGE and RICHARD.

O. FOS. I have no other end, sir ; let our factors peruse and deal for both.

BREW. Mine is returned. George, here's a new business ; you and Richard must deal for some commodities betwixt us ; if you find 'em even gain or but little loss, take carriage presently, and carry 'em home.

GEORGE. I shall.

O. FOS. Richard, have you any further news yet from our shipping ?

RICH. Not yet, sir ; but by account from the last, when they put from Dover, this tide should bring them into Saint Catherine's pool ; the wind has been friendly.

O. FOS. Listen their arrival, and bid the gunner speak it

In his loud thunder all the city over ;

Tingle the merchants' ears at the report

Of my abundant wealth. Now go with George.

RICH. I shall do both, sir. [Exeunt FACTORS.

O. FOS. I must plainly now confess, master alderman,

I shall gain much by you. The half of your ship
Defrays my full cost.

BREW. Beshrew me, if I grudge it, being myself
A sufficient gainer by my venture, sir.

Enter MISTRESS FOSTER.

MRS FOS. Still flows the tide of my unhappiness;
The stars shoot mischief, and every hour
Is critical to me.

O. Fos. How now, woman?

Wrecked in the haven of felicity? What ail'st thou?

MRS FOS. I think the devil's mine enemy.

O. Fos. I hope so too; his hate is better than his friendship.

MRS FOS. Your brother—your good brother,
sir—

O. Fos. What of him? he's in Ludgate again.

MRS FOS. No, he's in Highgate; he struts it bravely—

An alderman's pace at least.

O. Fos. Why, these

Are oracles, doubtful enigmas!

MRS FOS. Why,

I'm sure you have heard the news; he's married, forsooth.

O. Fos. How, married?

No woman of repute would choose so slightly.

MRS FOS. A woman, in whose breast I'd thought had liv'd

The very quintessence of discretion:

And who is't, think you? nay, you cannot guess,

Though I should give you a day to [un]riddle it:

It is my gossip, man, the rich

Widow of Cornhill.

O. Fos. Fie, fie! 'tis fabulous.

MRS FOS. Are you my husband? then is she his wife.

How will this upstart beggar shoulder up,

And take the wall of you! his new-found pride

Will know no eldership.

O. Fos. But, wife, my wealth will five times double his

Ere this tide ebb again : I wonder I hear not
The brazen cannon proclaim the arrival
Of my infinite substance.

MRS FOS. But beggars
Will be proud of little, and shoulder at the best.

O. FOS. Let him first pay his old score, and then reckon :

But that she——

MRS FOS. Ay, that's it mads me too.
Would any woman, 'less to spite herself,
So much profane the sacred name of wedlock :
A dove to couple with a stork, or a lamb a viper ?

O. FOS. Content thee ; forgive her ; she'll do so no more.

She was a rich widow : a wife he'll make her poor.

BREW. So, sir, you have clos'd it well ; if so ill it prove,
Leave it to proof, and wish not misery

Enter STEPHEN and ROBERT.

Unto your enemy. Look, here he comes.

O. FOS. You say true ; 'tis my enemy indeed.

STEPH. Save you, master alderman, I have some business with you.

BREW. With me, sir ? and most welcome ; I rejoice to see you.

MRS FOS. Do you observe, sir, he will not know you now ?

Jockey's a gentleman now.¹

O. FOS. Well fare rich widows, when such beggars flourish ;

But ill shall they fare that flourish o'er such beggars.

STEPH. Ha ! ha ! ha !

¹ [Or, Jack will be a gentleman. This is a common proverb. It occurs in "A Garden of Spiritual Flowers," 1610, edit. 1638, part ii. p. 303.]

MRS FOS. He laughs at you.

O. FOS. No wonder, woman, he would do that in Ludgate ;

But 'twas when his kind nephew did relieve him :
I shall hear him cry there again shortly.

STEPH. Oysters, new Walfleet oysters !

O. FOS. The gentleman is merry.

MRS FOS. No, no, no ; he does this to spite me ;
as who should say,

I had been a fishwife in my younger days.

BREW. Fie, fie, gentlemen ! this is not well ;

My ears are guilty to hear such discords.

[ROBERT kneels to his father.

Look, Master Foster ; turn your eye that way ;

There's duty unregarded, while envy struts

In too much state : believe me, gentlemen,

I know not which to chide first.

O. FOS. What idol kneels that heretic to ?

STEPH. Rise, boy, thou art now my son, and owest no knee

To that unnatural : I charge you, rise.

O. FOS. Do, sir, or turn your adoration that way ;

You were kind to him in his tatter'd state ;

Let him requite it now.

MRS FOS. Do, do, we have paid for't aforehand.

ROB. I would I were divided in two halves,

So that might reconcile your harsh division.

STEPH. Proud sir, this son, which you have alienated

For my love's sake, shall by my love's bounty

Ride side by side in the best equipage

Your scorns dare pattern him.

O. FOS. Ay, ay, a beggar's gallop up and down.

MRS FOS. Ay, 'tis up now, the next step down.

STEPH. Ha, ha ! I laugh at your envy, sir. My business

Is to you.

BREW. Good sir, speak of anything but this.

STEPH. Sir, I am furnishing some shipping forth,

And want some English traffic, broadcloths, kerseys,

Or suchlike; my voyage is to the Straits:

If you can supply me, sir, I'll be your chapman.

BREW. That I shall soon resolve you, sir.

Enter FACTORS.

Come hither, George.

O. FOS. This is the rich merchantman;

MRS FOS. That's neither grave nor wise;

O. FOS. Who will kill a man at Tyburn shortly.

MRS FOS. By carts that may arise;¹

Or if the hangman die, he may have his office.

BREW. Then you have bargain'd, George?

GEORGE. And the ware carried home, sir; you must look

To be little gainer; but lose you cannot.

BREW. 'Tis all I desire from thence. Sir, I can furnish you

With wares I lately from your brother bought:

Please you go see them, for I would fain divide you,

Since I can win no nearer friendship.

STEPH. I'll go with you, sir.

[Exeunt BREWEN, STEPHEN, and GEORGE.]

O. FOS. Take your adoption with you, sir.

ROB. I crave but your blessing with me, sir.

O. FOS. 'Tis my curse then; get thee out of mine eye:

¹ These four lines seem to be a quotation, probably from some old ballad.

Thou art a beam in't, and I'll tear it out,
Ere it offend to look on thee.¹

MRS FOS. Go, go, sir; follow your uncle-father,
Help him to spend what thrift has got together;
It will be charity in you to spend,
Because your charity it was to lend.

ROB. My charity! you can a virtue name,
And teach the use, yet never knew the same.

[Exit.

Enter RICHARD.

O. Fos. See, wife, here comes Richard; now listen,
And hear me crown'd the wealthiest London merchant.

Why dost thou look so sadly?

MRS FOS. Why dost not speak? hast lost thy tongue?

RICH. I never could speak worse.

O. Fos. Why, thy voice is good enough.

RICH. But the worst accent that ever you heard;
I speak a screech-owl's note. O, you have made
The most unhappiest bargain that ever merchant did!

O. Fos. Ha?

What can so baleful be, as thou wouldst seem
To make by this sad prologue? I am no traitor,
To confiscate my goods: speak, whate'er it be.

RICH. I would you could conceit it, that I might Not speak it.

O. Fos. Dally not with torments,
Sink me at once.

RICH. Now you've spoke it half;
'Tis sinking I must treat of: your ships are all sunk.

¹ Here is an evident allusion to two passages in the Gospel of St Matthew.

O. Fos. Ha!

MRS Fos. O thou fatal raven! let me pull thine eyes out

For this sad croak. [Flies at RICHARD.

O. Fos. Hold, woman! hold, prythee! 'tis none of his fault.

MRS Fos. No, no, 'tis thine, thou wretch; and therefore

Let me turn my vengeance all on thee; thou Hast made hot haste to empty all my warehouses, And made room for that the sea hath drunk before thee.

O. Fos. Undone for ever! Where could this mischief fall?

Were not my ships in their full pride at Dover; And what English Charybdis has the devil digg'd To swallow nearer home.

RICH. Even in the mouth And entrance of the Thames they were all cast away.

O. Fos. Dam up thy mouth From any further mischievous relation.

RICH. Some men were sav'd, but not one penny-worth Of goods.

O. Fos. Even now thy baleful utterance Was chok'd, and now it runs too fast; Thou fatal bird, no more.

MRS Fos. May serpents breed, And fill this fatal stream, and poison her for ever.

O. Fos. O, curse not; they come too fast!

MRS Fos. Let me curse somewhere, wretch, or else I'll throw

Them all on thee; 'tis thou, ungodly slave, That art the mark unto the wrath of heaven: I thiv'd ere I knew thee.

O. Fos. I prythee, split me too.

MRS FOS. I would I could! I would I had ne'er seen thee,
For I ne'er saw hour of comfort since I knew
thee.

O. Fos. Undone for ever! My credit I have crack'd

To buy a venture, which the sea has soak'd ;
What worse can woe report ?

MRS FOS. Yes, worse than all,
Thy enemies will laugh, and scorn thy fall.

O. Fos. Be it the worst, then : that place I did assign

My unthrifty brother, Ludgate, must now be mine.
Break, and take Ludgate.

MRS FOS. Take Newgate rather.

O. Fos. I scorn'd my child, now he may scorn his father.

MRS FOS. Scorn him still !

O. Fos. I will : would he my wants relieve,
I'd scorn to take what he would yield to give.
My heart be still my friend, although no other.
I'll scorn the help of either son or brother.
My portion's begging now : seldom before,
In one sad hour, was man so rich and poor.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV., SCENE 1.

Enter MISTRESS JANE, GODFREY SPEEDWELL, and MASTER LAMBSKIN.

JANE. Gentlemen, my father's not within ; please you to walk a turn or two in the garden ; he'll not be long.

LAMB. Your father, Mistress Jane ? I hope you have observation in you, and know our humours ; we come not a-wooing to your father.

SPEED. Experience must bear with folly ; thou art all innocent, and thy name is Lambskin ; grave sapience guides me, and I care not a pin for thy squibs and thy crackers. My old dry wood shall make a lusty bonfire when thy green chips shall lie hissing in the chimney-corner. Remember, mistress, I can make you a lady by mine own experience.

LAMB. Prythee, do not stand troubling the gentlewoman with thy musty sentences, but let her love be laid down betwixt us like a pair of cudgels, and into whose hands she thrusts the weapons first, let him take up the bucklers.¹

SPEED. A match between us.

JANE. Must I be stickler, then ?

LAMB. We are both to run at the ring of your setting-up, and you must tell us who deserves most favour.

JANE. But will you stand both at my disposing ?

LAMB. Else let me never stand but in a pillory.

JANE. You love me both, you say ?

SPEED. By this hand !

LAMB. Hand ? Zounds ! by the four-and-twenty elements.

JANE. Pray spare your oaths ; I do believe you do,

You would not else make all this stir to woo.

Sir Godfrey, you are a knight both tough and old ;

A rotten building cannot long time hold.

LAMB. Speedwell, live well, die well, and be hanged well, change your copy well, your experience will not carry it else.

¹ i.e., Let him be declared victor. The expression is not uncommon in our old dramatic writers.

JANE. You're rich too, at least yourself so say ;
What, though you're but a gilded man of clay.

LAMB. A man of gingerbread ; i' faith, I could find in my heart to eat him.

JANE. Should I wed you, the fire with frost must marry,
January and May ! I for a younger tarry.

LAMB. That's I ! In troth, I'll be thy young Lambskin ; thou shalt find me as innocent as a sucking dove. Speak, sweet mistress, am I the youth in a basket ?

JANE. You are the sweet youth, sir, whose pretty eyes
Would make me love ; but you must first be wise.

SPEED. Ha, ha ! Is your coxcomb cut ? I see experience must board this fair pinnace. A word in private.

LAMB. I'll have no words in private, unless I hear too. [Retire.]

Enter MASTER BREWEN, STEPHEN, and ROBERT.

BREW. Come, gentlemen, we'll make few words about it :

Merchants in bargaining must not, like soldiers
Lying at a siege, stay moneths, weeks, days,
But strike at the first parley.

Broadcloths and wools, and other rich commodities,

I lately from your brother brought, are all your own.

STEPH. 'Tis well.

BREW. Then be not angry, gentle sir,
If now a string be touch'd, which hath too long Sounded so harshly over all the city ;
I now would wind it to a musical height.

STEPH. Good master alderman, I think that string

Will still offend mine ear ; you mean the jarring
'Twixt me and my brother ?

BREW. In troth, the same.

STEPH. I hate no poison like that brother's name.

BREW. O fie ! not so.

STEPH. Uncivil churl, when all his sails were up,
And that his proud heart danc'd on golden waves——

BREW. As, heaven be thanked, it still does !

STEPH. Yet, sir, then,

I being sunk, and drown'd in mine own misery,
He would not cast out a poor line of thread,
And bring me to the shore ; I had been dead,
And might have starv'd for him.

BREW. A better fate, sir,
Stood at your elbow.

STEPH. True, sir : this was he,
That lifted me from want and misery ;
Whose cruel father, for that [act of] good,
Cast him away, scorning his name and blood ;
Lopp'd from his side this branch that held me
dear ;

For which he's now my son, my joy, my heir.
But, for his father, hang him !

BREW. Fie, fie !

STEPH. By heaven !

BREW. Come, come,

Live in more charity, he is your brother ;
If that name offend, I'll sing that tune no more.
Yonder's my daughter busy with her suitors ;
We'll visit them. Now, Jane, bid your friends welcome.

JANE. They must be welcome, sir, that come with you ;

To thee ten thousand welcomes still are due.

ROB. My sweet mistress ! [Kisses her.]

LAMB. Zounds ! Sir knight, we have stood beating the bush, and the bird's flown away; this city bowler has kissed the mistress¹ at first cast.

BREW. How fare ye, gentlemen? what cheer, sir knight?

SPEED. An adventurer still, sir, to this new-found land.²

LAMB. He sails about the point, sir; but he cannot put in yet.

BREW. The wind may turn, sir. [To STEPHEN.]
A word, Master Foster. [They converse apart.]

LAMB. You see, Sir Speedwell, what card is turned up for trump; I hold my life, this spruce citizen will forestall the market: O, these brisk factors are notable firkers.

SPEED. I doubt, sir, he will play the merchant³ with us.

BREW. They both are suitors, sir, yet both shoot wide;

My daughter, sure, must be your kinsman's bride.

STEPH. I'll give her a wedding-ring on that condition,

And put a stone in't worth a thousand pound, sir.

BREW. You have my hand and heart to't, be she pleased so.

LAMB. 'Sfoot! let's show ourselves gallants or

¹ This phrase is, I believe, still common among bowlers, with the exception that the mistress is now called the jack.

² [An apparent allusion to the then recent settlement of Newfoundland, an account of which is to be found in Vaughan's "Golden Fleece," 1626, and "Newlander's Cure," 1630, besides other works.]

³ [The word began, even before this, to acquire a bad sense, and was used contemptuously, as we use chapman or chap now.]

gallymawfries:¹ shall we be outbraved by a cockney? [To ROBERT.] A word, my fair Zenocrates; do you see, sir, here be those that have gone a-fishing, and can give you a gudgeon?

ROB. You were best go fish for better manners, or I shall bob for eels² with you. [Strikes him.]

LAMB. Zounds! are you a striker? Draw, sir knight.

BREW. Not in my house; I pray, be quiet, gentlemen.

ROB. He dares not do't abroad, believe me, sir.

STEPH. Now, by my life, my boy, for this brave spirit

I'll hug thee in mine arms: lose life and limbs,
Ere thou forsake thy love.

LAMB. He is no rival he, sir,³ has struck me;
And we are gentlemen.

SPEED. And hear ye, sir; let him seek out his equals; for some of us are in danger to make her a lady shortly: I know what I speak; what I speak I'll do; yet I'll do nothing but what comes from grave experience.

STEPH. Speak what you please, sir; he's a gentleman

As good as either of you both; and shall

In list of love, for such a bedfellow.

Brave him that dares; and here lay down more gold

To win her love than both your states are worth.

¹ This word seems used here with no very definite meaning. Pistol, in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," ii. I, applies it to Mrs Ford—

"He loves thy gally-mawfrey; Ford, perpend."

² [A play on eels and heels.]

³ [Old copy and Dilke read—

"He's no rival here, sir; has struck me."]

SPEED. Ha! do you know us, sir? you grow too bold; my experience now hath found you: you were once a tattered fellow, your name is Foster; have you such gold to give?

LAMB. Yes, yes, 'has won it betting at the bowling-alleys, or at the pigeon-holes in the garden-alleys.

STEPH. You are muddy grooms¹ to upbraid me with that scorn
Which virtue now gilds over. Pray ye, gentlemen,
May I request your names?

LAMB. Our names are in the heralds' books, I warrant you;
My name is Innocent Lambskin; and this knight, Simply though he stands here, is known to be Sir Godfrey Speedwell.

STEPH. Well may he speed, sir. Lambskin and Speedwell. Ha! is't so? I think I shall give you a medicine to purge this itch of love, sir.

LAMB. No itch neither, sir; we have no scabs here
But yourself and your cousin.

STEPH. Very good, sir! my little Lambskin, I have you
Here in sheep's-skin [Produces a parchment]; look you, 'tis so, i' faith.

See, master alderman, these two crack'd gallants
Are in several bonds to my predecessor
For a debt of full two thousand a-piece.
Cousin, fetch me a sergeant straight.

ROB. Yes, sir.

SPEED. O, let him: I have a protection, sir.

STEPH. I'll try that, sir.

SPEED. A sergeant? nay, then,
Experience must work: legs be strong and bold:

¹ [Men, fellows.]

When sergeants wait at feasts, the cheer's but cold.

I'll shift for one.

[Exit.

LAMB. Knight, knight! 'Sfoot! if an errand-knight run away, I were an errand ass to tarry, and be caught in the lime-bush: I love the wench well; but if they have no hole to place me in but the hole in the counter, I'll be gone and leave 'em; that's flat.

[Exit.

BREW. You have scared the suitors from the mark, sir.

STEPH. I am glad on't, sir; they are but such as seek

To build their rotten state on you, and with your wealth

To underprop their weakness:

Believe me, reverend sir, I had much rather

You'd venture that my coz might call you father.

BREW. We'll talk of that anon. See, sir, here comes you wife,

Enter STEPHEN'S WIFE.

The theme of all her time, with goodness mix'd,

The happy woman that was never vex'd.

You're welcome, Mistress Foster.

WIFE. I thank ye, sir.

STEPH. Wife, your two debtors

Were here but now, Speedwell and Lambskin.

A wolf could not have torn poor Lambskin worse,

Than the bare name of sergeant: the very thought

Made them both take their heels and run away.

WIFE. 'Las! they are poor and lean, and being so,

Kill them not till they are fatter.

STEPH. At thy girdle, sweet, hang the keys

To lock the prison doors or let them loose:

'Twas my intent only (in way of mirth)
To rid them from the presence of Mistress Jane,
That our adopted son might have no bar
Unto his love.

WIFE. The match is fair ; and were that knot once tied,
I'd send some angels to attend the bride.

Enter GEORGE.

STEPH. Sir, here's your factor.

BREW. Are the wares ready ?

GEORGE. Yes, and delivered, sir, to Master Foster's servants, who conveyed them in carts to the Custom House, there to be shipped ; but going with them, sir, I met ill news.

BREW. Ill news ? what is't ?

GEORGE. Old Master Foster's ships, so richly laden,
By strange misfortune, sir, are cast away.

BREW. Now heaven forbid !

ROB. O me !

STEPH. How ? cast away ? where ?

BREW. 'Tis impossible ; they rid at Dover safe
When he outbought my full share in the freight,
And paid me down near thirty thousand pounds
In wares and money.

GEORGE. Which, had he not done, you had lost your venture.

By Master Foster's own appointment, sir, they weighed

Their anchors up, and so to come for London ;
But by a merciless storm they all were swallowed,
Even in the Thames's mouth : yet the men were sav'd,

But all the goods were lost.

ROB. O my poor father ! This loss will break his back.

STEPH. Ha! what is that to you? If in my favour

You'll sit warm, then bury all love to him,
Nay, duty; hear you, sir! What! shedd'st thou tears

For him that had no care to see thy heart
Drop blood? He was unnatural, and heaven
Hath justly now rewarded him.

BREW. 'Tis a most strange fate!
He needs would buy my part at any rate;
And now all's lost.

STEPH. Greedy desire he swallowed,
And now is swallowed: 'tis but his hire,
And I'll not pity it no more than he
In his abundance did my misery.

WIFE. I grieve for my poor gossip, his good
wife;

She never met good fortune all her life,
And this will break her heart-strings:
In good sooth, I'll go and comfort her.

STEPH. In good sooth, you shall not;
Nor him, nor her, at this time, gentle wife;
He scorn'd me in his height: now being poor,
If that he needs my help, he knows my door.
Sir, we'll for this time leave you; at fitter leisure

We'll have this marriage talk'd of.

BREW. At your own good pleasure.

STEPH. Come, wife. Go not to see your father,
sir,

I charge you.

BREW. Jane, bring your friends to th' door.

ROB. [Aside.] I'll help my father, though myself grow poor. [Exeunt.]

BREW. Where's my factor?

GEORGE. Here, sir.

BREW. What, are the square stones and timber brought, as I appointed?

GEORGE. Yes, sir, and the workmen that daily ply the work are in number fourscore at least.

BREW. My vows flew up to heaven, that I would make

Some pious work in the brass book of fame,
That might till doomsday lengthen out my name.
Near Norton Folgate, therefore, have I bought
Ground to erect this house, which I will call
And dedicate St Mary's Hospital ;
And when 'tis finish'd, o'er the gates shall stand
In capital letters, these words fairly graven,
For I have given the work and house to heaven,
And call'd it Domus Dei, God's house ;
For in my zealous faith I know full well,
Where good deeds are, there heaven itself doth dwell. [Exit.

Enter OLD FOSTER, RICHARD his factor, and the KEEPER OF LUDGATE.

RICH. Good sir, resolve not thus ; return again,
Your debts are not so great that you should yield
Your body thus to prison unconstrain'd.

O. Fos. I will not trust the iron hearts of men ;
My credit's lost, my wealth the sea has swallowed,
Wrack'd at my door, even in the mouth o' th'
Thames ;

O my misfortune ! never man like me
Was so thrown down and cast to misery.

RICH. Dear sir, be patient !

O. Fos. I prythee, get thee gone,
And with thy diligence assist thy mistress
To keep that little left to help herself ;
Whilst here in Ludgate I secure my body
From writs, arrests, and executions,
Which, well I know, my cruel creditors
Will thunder on me. Go, get thee gone !

If what is left they'll take, do thou agree ;
If not, I am resolv'd here to stay and die.

RICH. I'll do my best, sir, to procure your peace.
[Exit.

O. FOS. Do so. [To the KEEPER.] Come, sir,
I yield myself your prisoner :

You are the keeper of this Ludgate ?

KEEPER. Yes, sir ;

Your name is register'd amongst the prisoners.

O. FOS. So !

I have seen the fair outside of this tomb before ;
This goodly apple has a rotten core.

KEEPER. As all prisons have, sir.

O. FOS. I prythee, bar me of no privilege
Due to a free citizen : thou knowest me well ?

KEEPER. Yes, Master Foster, and I sorrow for your losses,

Yet doubt not but your son and brother——

O. FOS. O, speak not of them ! do not kiss and kill me ;

I have no son nor brother that esteems me,
And I for ever hate their memory.

Prythee, no more ! I am come sick

Into a bad inn, and look for worse attendance :

I have taken a surfeit of misfortunes, and here

Must swallow pills, with poison to recure me :

I am sea-sick, sir, and heave my hands to heaven ;

Ne'er to so low an ebb was Foster driven.

KEEPER. There be some fees to pay, sir, at your coming in.

O. FOS. So, so !

If this old walnut-tree, after all this cudgelling.

Have but one cluster left, thou shalt have that too ;

If not, take off these leaves that cover me,

Pull off these white locks ! rend them from my head !

And let them in my woes be buried.

KEEPER. 'Las, sir ! this house is poor.

O. FOS. I think no less,
 For rich men seldom meet with such distress :
 Well, well ! what book must I read over now ?
 What servile oar must I be tied to here,
 Slave-like to tug within this Christian galley ?

KEEPER. Sir, being the youngest prisoner in the house,

You must beg at the iron grate above,
 As others do, for your relief and theirs.

O. FOS. For a beggar to beg, sir, is no shame ;
 And for the iron grate, it bears an emblem
 Of iron-hearted creditors, that force men lie
 In loathsome prisons thus to starve and die.

Enter ROBERT.

KEEPER. Who would you speak with, sir ?

O, cry you mercy ! 'tis his son :

I'll leave them.

[Exit.

O. FOS. O torment to my soul ! what mak'st thou here ?

Cannot the picture of my misery
 Be drawn, and hung out to the eyes of men,
 But thou must come to scorn and laugh at it ?

ROB. Dear sir,

I come to thrust my back under your load,
 To make the burden lighter.

O. FOS. Hence from my sight, dissembling villain ! go !

Thine uncle sends defiance to my woe,
 And thou must bring it. Hence ! thou basilisk ;
 That kill'st me with thine eyes. Nay, never kneel ;

[ROBERT kneels.

These scornful mocks more than my woes I feel.

ROB. Alas ! I mock ye not, but come in love
 And natural duty, sir, to beg your blessing ;
 And for mine uncle——

O. FOS. Him and thee I curse ;

I'll starve ere I eat bread [bought] from his purse
 Or from thy hand. Out, villain! tell that cur,
 Thy barking uncle, that I lie not here
 Upon my bed of riot, as he did,
 Cover'd with all the villanies which man
 Had ever woven; tell him I lie not so,
 It was the hand of heaven struck me thus low,
 And I do thank it. Get thee gone, I say,
 Or I shall curse thee, strike thee; prythee, away!
 Or if thou'lt laugh thy fill at my poor state,
 Then stay, and listen to the prison-grate,
 And hear thy father, an old wretched man,
 That yesterday had thousands, beg and cry
 To get a penny: O my misery!

ROB. Dear sir, for pity hear me.

O. Fos. Upon my curse I charge no nearer come:

I'll be no father to so vile a son.

[Exit.

ROB. O my abortive fate!

Why for my good am I thus paid with hate!
 From this sad place of Ludgate here I freed
 An uncle, and I lost a father for it;
 Now is my father here, whom if I succour,
 I then must lose my uncle's love and favour.
 My father once being rich, and uncle poor,
 I him relieving was thrust forth of door.
 Baffled, revil'd, and disinherited:
 Now mine own father here must beg for bread,
 Mine uncle being rich; and yet, if I
 Feed him, myself must beg. O misery,
 How bitter is thy taste! yet I will drink
 Thy strongest poison: fret what mischief can,
 I'll feed my father; though, like the pelican,
 I peck mine own breast for him.

[OLD FOSTER appears above at the grate, a box hanging down.

O. Fos. Bread, bread! one penny to buy a loaf of bread for the tender mercy!

ROB. O me, my shame ! I know that voice full well ;

I'll help thy wants, although thou curse me still.

O. Fos. Bread, bread ! some Christian man send back.

Your charity to a number of poor prisoners.

One penny for the tender mercy !

[ROBERT puts in money.

The hand of heaven reward you, gentle sir,

Never may you want, never feel misery ;

Let blessings in unnumber'd measure grow,

And fall upon your head where'er you go.

ROB. O happy comfort ! curses to the ground
First struck me : now with blessings I am crown'd.

O. Fos. Bread, bread, for the tender mercy !
one penny for a loaf of bread !

ROB. I'll buy more blessings : take thou all my store,

I'll keep no coin, and see my father poor.

[Puts in more money.

O. Fos. Good angels guard you, sir ; my prayers shall be

That heaven may bless you for this charity !

ROB. If he knew me, sure he would not say so ;

Yet I have comfort, if by any means

I get a blessing from my father's hands.

How cheap are good prayers ! a poor penny buys

That by which man up in a minute flies,

And mounts to heaven.

Enter STEPHEN.

O me ! mine uncle sees me.

STEPH. Now, sir, what make you here
So near the prison ?

ROB. I was going, sir,
To buy meat for a poor bird I have,

That sits so sadly in the cage of late,
I think he'll die for sorrow.

STEPH. So, sir; your pity will not quit your pains:

I fear me, I shall find that bird to be
That churlish wretch your father, that has taken Shelter here in Ludgate. Go to, sir! urge me
not,

You had best; I have given you warning;
Fawn not upon him, nor come not near him,
If you'll have my love.

ROB. 'Las, sir! that lamb
Were most unnatural that should hate the dau.

STEPH. Lamb me no lambs, sir!

ROB. Good uncle! alas!

You know, when you lay here, I succour'd you,
So let me now help him.

STEPH. Yes, as he did me,
To laugh and triumph at my misery;
You freed me with his gold, but 'gainst his will:
For him I might have rotted, and lain still:
So shall he now.

ROB. Alack the day!

STEPH. If him thou pity, 'tis thine own decay.

O. FOS. Bread, bread! some charitable man remember the poor prisoners: bread for the tender mercy! one penny!

ROB. O listen, uncle!

That's my poor father's voice.

STEPH. There let him howl.

Get you gone, and come not near him.

ROB. O my soul,
What tortures dost thou feel! Earth ne'er shall find

A son so true, yet forc'd to be unkind. [Exit.

STEPH. Well, go thy ways, thou pattern of true virtue;

My heart is full: I could e'en weep,

(And much ado I had to forbear.)
 To hear a brother begging in a jail,
 That but erewhile spread up a lofty sail.
 As proudly as the best. O, 'twere a sin
 Unpardonable in me, should I not succour him!
 Yes, I will do't, yet closely it shall be done,
 And he not know from whence his comforts come.
 What ho! keeper, there! a word, I pray.

Enter KEEPER.

KEEPER. What's your pleasure, sir?

STEPH. What's he that at the grate there begg'd even now?

KEEPER. One Master Foster, sir, a decayed citizen new-come in. Cry you mercy, sir, you know him better than myself, I think.

STEPH. I should do, knew he me, as I would know him.

Prythee, take him from the grate; and that
 No more he stand to beg, there is ten pound
 To pay his score and take off all his wants:
 If he demand who sends it, tell him 'tis
 Thine own free hand to lend him money.

KEEPER. Well, sir, I shall.

STEPH. Spend what he will, my purse shall pay it all;

And at his parting hence the poorest prisoner,
 And all free citizens that live in Ludgate,
 Shall bless his coming in: I'll for his sake
 Do something now that, whilst this city stands,
 Shall keep the Fosters' name engraven so high,
 As no black storm shall cloud their memory.

KEEPER. Heaven bless your purpose, sir!

[Exeunt.]

Enter STEPHEN'S WIFE, and her Sister, OLD FOSTER'S WIFE.

WIFE. Sister, there's no way to make sorrow light

But in the noble bearing ; be content.
Blows given from heaven are our due punishment :

All shipwrecks are no drownings : you see buildings

Made fairer from their ruins : he that I married—
The brother to your husband—lay, you know ;
On the same bed of misery ; yet now
He's rank'd with the best citizens.

MRS FOS. O, you were born to wealth and happiness ;

I, to want and scorn !

WIFE. Come, I will work my husband : stay this grief.

The longest sorrow finds at last relief.

Enter CLOWN.

Now, sir, your business ?

CLOWN. Marry, mistress, here are two creatures, scarce able to make one man, desire to speak with
you.

WIFE. What are they ? Know their names.

CLOWN. Nay, I know that already : the one is a thing that was plucked into the world by the head and shoulders to be wondered at, and 'tis called a knight ; the other is a coach-horse of the same overridden race, and that's a foolish gentleman.

WIFE. O, they are my old debtors, Speedwell and Lambskin :

Go, call them in : and, my gentle sister,
Comfort yourself and my imprison'd brother,
To whom commend me ; give to him this gold ;
What good I can I'll do for him, be bold.

MRS FOS. May heavenly blessings guard you from all ill :

Never was woman vex'd as I am still.

[Exit.]

Enter SPEEDWELL and LAMBSKIN.

WIFE. Now, good Sir Godfrey and Master Innocent.

LAMB. I put my innocent case into your hands, mistress, as a simple country client thrusts his money into a lawyer's, who stands upon no great terms to take it.

SPEED. We come about the old business, the sickness of the purse, lady.

CLOWN. And they'd be loth to keep their beds i' th' counter, mistress; they are afraid of sergeants; Master Lambskin knows that mace¹ is a binder.

LAMB. No, truly it makes me loose, for I never smell it, though it be two streets off, but it gives me a stool presently.

CLOWN. Ay, you have been a loose liver always: 'tis time to look to you.

SPEED. Fair lady, we are your debtors, and owe you money:

Experience tells us that our bonds are forfeit,
For which your husband threaten'd to arrest us;
My shoulders love no such clappings; I love tobacco,

But would be loth to drink in Wood Street pipes:²
Some money we will pay ere we go hence:
I speak, you see, with grave experience.

WIFE. I know it well, sir.

LAMB. Had not your husband (when he went about fowling
For the alderman's daughter) driven away the bird,

¹ I scarcely need observe that the Clown puns between the sergeant's mace and the spice of that name. Poor as it is, it is common enough.

² One of the counters was situated in Wood Street, Cheapside.

We might have bidden you to a better breakfast ;
But now you must take what we can set before
you.

WIFE. I am content to do so : you shall find
Nor me nor my husband carry a griping mind.

Enter ROBERT.

Now, coz, where's your uncle ?

ROB. He's hard at hand, I saw him coming
With the Lord Mayor and Aldermen.

LAMB. Zounds ! knight, if the mayor come,
The shoulder-clappers are not far off.

WIFE. O, fear not, I'll be your surety, sir.

CLOWN. Do you not smell Poultry ware, Sir Godfrey ?

SPEED. Most horribly ; I'll not endure the scent
on't.

WIFE. Upon my trust, none here shall do you wrong.

[To ROBERT.] What is his business with the aldermen ?

ROB. About the entertainment of the king,
That means to visit London.

WIFE. Saw you your sad father ?

ROB. I did ; would I might never see man-
more,

Since he so hates my sight ! the prison door,
Which gapes for comers-in, that mouth of hell,
Shut me out with a churlish cold farewell :

After my father's most unnatural part

Was play'd on misery's stage, mine uncle comes
In thunder on me, threatening with black storms
To nail me to the earth, if I relieved
My poor old father.

Enter STEPHEN.

CLOWN. Here's my master now, gentlemen.

STEPH. O gentlemen, you're both welcome ;
Have you paid this money on your bonds yet ?

WIFE. Not yet, sir ; but here they come like honest gentlemen
To take some order for it : good sweetheart,
Shall it be put to me ?

STEPH. Do as you please ;
In all thy deeds thou'rt govern'd with good stars ;
Therefore, if thou cry'st peace, I'll not raise wars.
E'en order it how thou wilt.

WIFE. I thank ye, sir : then tell me, gentlemen,
What present money can you pay ?

SPEED. Two hundred pound we can lay down.

LAMB. And take up seven times as much if we knew where to get it ; but there's our lamentable case : mistress, if you strip us any nearer, you'll strip the skin and all, I'll assure you.

WIFE. We'll shear no sheep so close.

LAMB. No sheep, forsooth, but a poor Innocent Lambskin.

CLOWN. You should be a calf by your white face.

WIFE. All your two thousand pound, gentlemen, we quit

For your two hundred : go, pay the money to my coz,

And receive your two bonds cancell'd.

[To STEPHEN.] Say, sir, are ye content ?

STEPH. Wife, I must stand to the arbitrament.
Go, cousin, receive their money : [To CLOWN] and,
sirrah,

Make them drink.

CLOWN. I'll make them drink, if they will.
Come, gallants, empty your bags, and I'll bum-bast your bellies : this lean gentleman looks as if he had no lining in's guts ; I could take him by the leg, and hurl him into the dog-house.

[Exeunt ROBERT, SPEEDWELL, LAMBSKIN, and CLOWN.]

STEPH. How now, sweet wife, what art thou musing on?

WIFE. I must come a-wooing to you, sir.

STEPH. A-wooing, sweet, for what?

WIFE. For your brother: O, 'tis unmeet
For souls fram'd by one square to grow uneven!
'Tis like a war 'mongst the great lights of heaven;
One cannot lose his beauty, but the other
Suffers eclipse—so brother against brother.

STEPH. Wouldst have me kiss him that would kill me?

WIFE. Would you kill a man lying at your feet?
Do good for ill.

STEPH. Thy songs are angels' tunes,
And on thy wings I'll fly with thee to heaven.
Thou speakest as I would have thee;
His debts I have justly weigh'd, and find them light.

WIFE. The easier then ta'en off.

STEPH. Thou sayest most right:
But I of purpose keep aloof to try
My kinsman, whom I spied most dolefully
Hovering about the grate, where his father cried
With piteous voice for bread; yet did I chide,
And rail'd against the boy, but my heart says
(Howe'er my tongue) it was drown'd in tears,
To see such goodness in a son.

WIFE. Such wheels in children's bosoms seldom run.

STEPH. I'll lay a wager, wife, that this two hundred pounds,
Paid by these foolish fellows, will by the boy
Be given his father.

WIFE. Troth, would it might!

STEPH. In doing me such wrong he does me right.

Ludgate was once my dwelling, and to shew
That I true feeling of his misery knew,

Albe't long since blown o'er, so thou'lt consent,
 Within that place I'll raise some monument,
 Shall keep our names alive till doomsday.

WIFE. I gladly shall agree
 To any act that tends to charity.

Enter MASTER BREWEN.

BREW. Come, where's Master Foster? O, you lose time, sir,
 Not meeting fortune that comes to kiss you!
 The Lord Mayor and Aldermen stay at the Guildhall

Expecting you, as well to set down order
 Touching the entertainment of the king,
 As to elect you for the following year
 A sheriff of London.

STEPH. Their loves outstrip my merit:
 Yet, since they lay that load on me, I'll bear it,
 And wait in scarlet on my liege and king.
 But pray resolve me, master alderman,
 Why makes the king this visitation?

BREW. Troth, sir, to honour me, I thank his highness,
 Who with my lord the Cardinal comes along
 To see the dedication of my house,
 Built for the weary travellers to rest in;
 Where stands three hundred beds for their relief,
 With meat, drink, and some money, when they part;
 Which I'll give freely with a willing heart.

STEPH. A pious, worthy, and religious act.
 Come, sir, to th' Guildhall. Wife, look to your kinsman;
 Watch him near, but do not hinder him
 If he relieve his father. Come, master alderman:
 With such sweet incense up your offerings fly,
 I'll build one altar more to charity. [Exeunt.]

ACT V., SCENE 1.

Ludgate. Enter OLD FOSTER, his WIFE, and KEEPER.

KEEPER. Come, come, be merry, sir; do as mourners do at funerals, wear your hat in your eyes, and laugh in your heart.

O. FOS. I have no such fat legacy left me, To teach me how to play the hypocrite.

KEEPER. No? Why, look ye, sir, you shall want neither meat, drink, money, nor anything that the house affords; or if anything abroad like ye, sir, here's money, send for what you will, sir. Nay, you shall beg no more at the grate neither.

O. FOS. Ha! is not this Ludgate?

KEEPER. Yes, sir.

O. FOS. A jail, a prison, a tomb of men lock'd up,

Alive and buried?

KEEPER. 'Tis what you please to call it.

O. FOS. O, at what crevice, then, hath comfort, Like a sunbeam, crept in? for all the doors And windows are of iron, and barr'd to keep Her out. I had a limb cut from my body Dear to me as [my] life; I had a son And brother, too. O grief!

They both would give me poison first in gold, Before their hollow palms ten drops should hold Of nature's drink, cold water, but to save My life one minute: whence should pity come, When my best friends do beat it from this room?

KEEPER. No matter, sir; since you have good meat set before you, never ask who sent it. If heaven provide for you, and make the fowls of the air your caters, feed you fat, and be thankful; and so I leave you. [Exit.]

MRS FOS. The keeper is your friend, and pours true balm
Into your smarting wounds; therefore, dear husband,
Endure the dressing with patience.

O. FOS. O wife, my losses are as numberless
As the sea-sands that swallowed them! And shall I,

In reckoning them, my sad griefs multiply?

MRS FOS. You may, sir;
But your dim eyes so thick with tears do run,
You cannot see from whence your comforts come:
Besides, your debts being truly counted
Cannot be great.

O. FOS. But all my wealth and state lies in the sea's bottom.

MRS FOS. It again may rise.

O. FOS. O, never!

MRS FOS. Good sir, so hope, for I from heaven
espy
An arm to pluck you from this misery.

Enter KEEPER.

KEEPER. Sir, there's one without desires to speak with you.

O. FOS. Go, send him in. [Exit KEEPER.]

None comes to do me good,
My wealth is lost, now let them take my blood.

Enter ROBERT.

Ha! what art thou? Call for the keeper there,
And thrust him out of doors, or lock me up.

MRS FOS. O, 'tis your son, sir!

O. FOS. I know him not: [ROBERT kneels.]
I am no king, unless of scorn and woe;

Why kneel'st thou, then? Why dost thou mock me so?

ROB. O my dear father, hither am I come,
Not like a threat'ning storm t' increase your wrack.
For I would take all sorrows from your back,
To lay them all on my own.

O. FOS. Rise, mischief, rise! Away, and get thee gone!

ROB. O, if I be thus hateful to your eye,
I will depart, and wish I soon may die;
Yet let your blessing, sir, but fall on me.

O. FOS. My heart still hates thee.

MRS FOS. Sweet husband!

O. FOS. Get you both gone!

That misery takes some rest that dwells alone;
Away, thou villain!

ROB. Heaven can tell,
Ache but your finger, I, to make it well,
Would cut my hand off.

O. FOS. Hang thee, hang thee!

MRS FOS. Husband!

O. FOS. Destruction meet thee! Turn the key there, ho!

ROB. Good sir, I'm gone; I will not stay to grieve you.

O, knew you for your woes what pains I feel,
You would not scorn me so. See, sir, to cool
Your heat of burning sorrow, I have got
Two hundred pounds, and glad it is my lot
To lay it down with reverence at your feet;
No comfort in the world to me is sweet,
Whilst thus you live in moan.

O. FOS. Stay!

ROB. Good troth, sir, I'll have none on't back,
Could but one penny of it save my life.

MRS FOS. Yet stay and hear him. O unnatural strife

In a hard father's bosom!

O. FOS. I see mine error now. O, can there grow

A rose upon a bramble? Did there e'er flow
Poison and health together in one tide?
I'm born a man: reason may step aside,
And lead a father's love out of the way:
Forgive me, my good boy, I went astray:
Look, on my knees I beg it—not for joy
Thou bring'st this golden rubbish, which I spurn;
But glad in this, the heavens mine eyeballs turn,
And fix them right to look upon that face,
Where love remains with pity, duty, grace.
O my dear wronged boy!

ROB. Gladness o'erwhelms my heart!
With joy I cannot speak!

MRS FOS. Crosses of this foolish world
Did never grieve my heart with torments more,
Than it is now grown light
With joy and comfort of this happy sight.

O. FOS. Yet, wife, I disinherited this boy.

ROB. Your blessing's all I crave.

O. FOS. And that enjoy
For ever: evermore my blessings fly
To pay thy virtues, love and charity.

Enter STEPHEN'S WIFE.

MRS FOS. Here comes your brother's wife.
Welcome, dear sister.

WIFE. I thank you. How fare you, brother?

O. FOS. Better than your husband's hate could wish me,
That laughs to see my back with sorrows bow:
But I am rid of half my ague now.

WIFE. Had you an ague, then?

O. FOS. Yes, and my heart had every hour a fit;
But now't has left me well, and I left it.

WIFE. O, 'tis well. Cousin, what make you here, I pray ?

ROB. To support a weak house falling to decay.

WIFE. 'Tis well if you can do't, and that the timber

You underprop it with be all your own.

Hark, coz, where's your uncle's money ?

ROB. Faith, aunt, 'tis gone ;

But not at dice nor drabbing.

WIFE. Sir, I believe,

With your uncle's gold your father you relieve.

ROB. You are sav'd, believing so : your belief's true.

WIFE. You cut large thongs of that's another's due,

And you will answer't ill. Now, in good troth,

I laugh at this jest : much good do them both :

My wager I had won, had I but laid. [Aside.]

O. FOS. What has my poor boy done, that you have made

So much blood rise in's cheeks ?

WIFE. Nothing, dear brother ;

Indeed all's well : the course that he has run

I like and love ; let him hold on the same ;

A son's love to a father none can blame :

I will not leave your brother's iron heart,

Till I have beat it soft with my entreats.

O. FOS. 'Twill ne'er be music, 'tis so full of frets.

WIFE. Frets make best music : strings the higher rack'd

Sound sweetest.

O. FOS. And sound nothing when they are crack'd,

As is his love to me, and mine to him.

WIFE. I hope you both in smoother streams shall swim.

He's now the Sheriff of London, and in council

Set at the Guildhall in his scarlet gown,
With mayor and aldermen, how to receive the king,

Who comes to see Master Brewen's hospital
To-morrow, consecrated by th' Cardinal,
And old St Mary's Spital, here by Shoreditch.

MRS FOS. Ay, sister, he and you may set 'Bout what you will; heav'n, I am sure, prospers
it;

But I am ever cross'd: you have been bound
For three great voyages, yet ne'er run aground—Maid, wife, and widow, and wife again—have spread

Full and fair sails, no wrecks you e'er did dread,
Nor e'er felt any; but even close ashore,
I'm sunk, and 'midst of all my wealth made poor.

WIFE. You must thank heaven.

MRS FOS. I do, indeed, for all.

WIFE. Sister, that hand can raise that gives the fall.

Enter KEEPER.

KEEPER. Master Foster, the new sheriff, your brother,
Is come to Ludgate, and I am come in haste
To know your pleasure, if you would see him.

O. FOS. I'll see a fury first; hence! clap to the door, I pray thee.

WIFE. Why, 'tis your brother, sir.

ROB. Father, let's fly the thunder of his rage.

WIFE. Stand valiantly,
And let me bear the storm: all hurts that are,
And ruins in your bosoms I'll repair.

Enter STEPHEN FOSTER.

STEPH. Where's the keeper? Go, sir, take my officers

And see your prisoners presently convey'd
From Ludgate unto Newgate and the Counters.

KEEPER. I shall, sir.

STEPH. Let the constables of the wards Assist you. Go, despatch ! and take these with
you.

[To ROBERT.] How now ! what mak'st thou here, thou caitiff ! Ha !

Com'st thou to stitch his wounds that seeks to cut
My throat ? Darest thou in despite Relieve this dotard ?

O. FOS. Get thee from my sight,
Thou devil in red : com'st thou in scarlet pride
To tread on thy poor brother in a jail ?
Is there but one small conduit-pipe that runs
Cold water to my comfort, and wouldst thou
Cut off that, thou cruel man ?

STEPH. Yes ;
I'll stop that pipe that thou may'st pining sit ;
When drops but fell on me, thou poison'd it :
Thou thrust'st a son's name from thy cruel breast
For clothing of his uncle ; now that uncle Shall thrust him naked forth for clothing thee ;
Banish'd for ever from my wealth and me.

O. FOS. Thou canst not be to nature so uneven,
To punish that which has a pay from heaven :
Pity, I mean, and duty. [STEPHEN offers to strike

ROBERT.] Wouldst thou strike ?
Wound me, then, that will kill thee, if I can :
Thou art no brother, and I'll be no man.

STEPH. Thou ravest.

O. FOS. How can I choose ? Thou makest me
mad :
For shame thou shouldst not make these white hairs sad :
Churl, beat not my poor boy ; let him not lose
Thy love for my sake ; I had rather bruise
My soul with torments for a thousand years,

Could I but live them, rather than salt tears
Thy malice draw from him : see, here's thy gold ;
Tell it : none's stole. My woes can ne'er be told !

ROB. O misery ! is nature quite forgot ?

O. FOS. Choke with thy dunghill-muck ! and vex me not.

STEPH. No, keep it ; he perhaps that money stole

To give it thee ; for which, to vex thy soul,
I'll turn him forth of doors : make him thy heir,
Of jails, miseries, curses, and despair,
For here I disinherit him of all.

O. FOS. No matter ; lands to him in heaven will fall.

WIFE. Good husband.

MRS FOS. Gentle brother.

ROB. Dear uncle.

STEPH. I am deaf.

O. FOS. And damn'd ; the devil's thumbs stop thine ears !

STEPH. I'll make thee wash those curses off with tears.

Keeper, away with him out of my sight ;
And do, sir, as I charg'd you.

KEEPER. Yes, sir, I will.

O. FOS. Poor tyranny ! when lions weak lambs kill. [Exeunt all but STEPHEN and his WIFE.]

STEPH. How now, wife, art vex'd yet ?

WIFE. Never so well content, believe me, sir ;
Your mildness wears this mask of cruelty well.

STEPH. I am glad they're gone ; mine eyes with rain did swell,

And much ado they had from pouring down.
The keeper knows my mind. Wife, I have paid
My brother's debts ; and when he's out of door
To march to Newgate, he shall be set free.

WIFE. O let me kiss thee for this charity.
But for your cousin, sir ?

STEPH. He's my life's best health.
The boy shall not miscarry for more wealth
Than London gates lock safe up every night.
My breath in black clouds flies: my thoughts are white.

WIFE. Why from Ludgate do you remove [the] prisoners?

STEPH. This is my meaning, wife:
I'll take the prison down, and build it new,
With leads to walk on, [and] rooms large and fair;
For when myself lay there, the noisome air
Chok'd up my spirits; and none better know
What prisoners feel than they that taste the woe.
The workmen are appointed for the business;
I will have't despatch'd, before 'tis thought on.

WIFE. In good deeds I'll walk hand in hand
with you;
There is a fair tenement adjoining
Close to the gate, that was my father's,
I'll give it freely; take it down, and add
So much ground to the work.

STEPH. ¹ 'Tis fairly given;

¹ This speech is not appropriated in the original, although divided from the wife's: neither are the words between brackets altogether an insertion of my own. The speech appears thus in the original:—

'Tis fairly given.
Thy soule on prisoners prayers shall mount to heaven:
The Plummers and the Workemen have survey'd the ground
From Paddington; from whence I'll have laid pipes
Long to London to convey sweet water into Ludgate:
From fresh Springs: when charity tunes the pipe, the Poore man sings. Enter Keeper.
How now, Keeper.

As I had occasion to give a note here, I thought one sample of the original might gratify the reader's curiosity, and he has a miniature of the whole work. The poet, who is here very minute in the description of Stephen's charity, is justified by the inscription on the wall quoted by Stow. On this subject, however, Strype observes, "The water I find not to be altogether his gift; for that I perused lately a book, wherein Thy soul on prisoners' prayers shall mount to heaven.

The plumbers and the workmen have survey'd
The ground from Paddington; whence I'll have laid

Pipes [all along] to London, to convey Sweet water into Ludgate from fresh springs:
When charity tunes the pipe, the poor man sings.

Enter KEEPER.

How now, keeper?

KEEP. The prisoners are remov'd, sir.

STEPH. What did you with my brother?

KEEP. As you commanded, sir, I have discharged him.

STEPH. How did he meet that unexpected kindness?

KEEP. Troth, sir, as a man o'ercome 'twixt grief and gladness;

But, turning to his son, he fetch'd a sigh

So violent as if his heart would break,

And (silent) wept, having no power to speak.

WIFE. Alas! good old man, some sweet bird must sing,

And give his sorrows present comforting.

STEPH. Not yet, I'll wrack his sorrows to the height,

And of themselves they'll then sink softly down.

Keeper, go thou again after my brother,

Charge in my name him and his son to appear

Before the king; to whom I will make known

I found a memorandum, that Sir Robert Knowles [Lord Mayor in 1400] gave maintenance for the supply of the prisoners of Ludgate and Newgate for ever" ("Appendix," p. 26). There can be little doubt, however, that this excellent man did something for the benefit of the prisoners, in regard to the supplying them with water.—Dilke.

Their wrongs against me, showing just cause
To disinherit both by course of law. Begone!

KEEP. I am gone, sir. [Exit.]

STEPH. Come, wife.

WIFE. What's your meaning, sir?

STEPH. Thou shalt know that anon.

The heavens oft scowl, clouds thicken, winds blow high,

Yet the brightest sun clears all, and so will I.

[Exeunt.]

Enter HENRY III., attended by MONTFORT, PEMBROKE, and ARUNDEL, LORD MAYOR, STEPHEN FOSTER as Sheriff, ALDERMAN BREWEN, &c.

KING. O, welcome is all love; our people's shouts
In their heart's language makes our bienvenues
Most high and sovereign: we return all thanks Unto our loving citizens; [To BREWEN] chiefly to you, sir,

Whose pious work invites our majesty
To royalise this place with our best presence,
Accompanied with this reverend Cardinal:
Would [that] me might, after [so] many broils,
End our days [too] in these religious toils:
We would work most faithfully. But, bounteous sir,
How do you call your buildings?

BREW. Unless it please your majesty to change it,
I call it Domus Dei.

KING. The house of God;
It is too good to change: pray you, proceed.

BREW. These are my ends: to all distressed Christians,

Whose travels this way bend, the hospital shall
Free succour be for three days and three nights Sojourn: diet¹ and lodging, both sweet and satia-fying:

¹ [Old copy, for diet.]

And (if their need be such) as much in coin
As shall, for three days more, defray their further travel :

This unto heaven—be you testator, good my liege,
And witness with me, noble gentlemen—
Most free and faithfully I dedicate.

KING. An honourable work, and deserves large memory.

MONT. 'Tis a good example, 'tis pity 'tis no better followed.

ARUN. But say, sir : now in some future age,
Perhaps some two or three hundred year behind us,
This place, intended for a use so charitable,
Should be unhallow'd again by villanous inhabitants,

Say whores instead of Christians, and
Your hospital tenements turn'd into stews;
Would not this grieve you in your grave ?¹

BREW. If my grave were capable of grief, sure it would, sir.

KING. Prythee, be a false prophet.

ARUN. I will, if I can, my lord.

KING. Let now our heralds in the streets proclaim

The title and [the] office of this hospital ;
Make known to all distressed travellers,

¹ I suspect Arundel to have been of Cranmer's school, and to have prophesied of what had actually happened. The following extract from a pamphlet of that time called, "Thieves falling out, true Men come by their Goods," [1615,] justifies the supposition : "And Shoreditch will complain to Dame Ann a Clear, if we of the sisterhood, should not uphold her jollity." It is not through the inattention of the editor that this, and the preceding speech of Brewen's, halt so lamentably : he has, in fact, exercised his utmost skill ; but, as with many other passages in this drama, his success has not equalled his exertion. [The pamphlet cited by Dilke is a re-issue, under a changed title, of Robert Greene's "Disputation between a He-Coneycatcher and a She-Coneycatcher," 1592.]

That we'll accept his charitable house ;
 This Domus Dei shall be their free sojourn,
 As is proposed.

Enter on the one side STEPHEN'S WIFE; on the other OLD FOSTER, MISTRESS FOSTER, JANE. ROBERT, and KEEPER. All kneel.

KING. What are these petitioners ?

ROB. Each hath a knee for duty, the other for petition.

KING. Rise, your duty's done ; your petitions
 Shall need no knees, so your intents be honest :
 Does none here know them ?

STEPH. Yes, my good lord,
 There's now a wonder in your sight.

KING. A wonder, Master Sheriff ?
 You mean for beauty ?

STEPH. No, my liege, I would not
 So boast mine own wife ; but it is a wonder
 That excels beauty.

KING. A wonder in a woman !
 What is't, I prythee ?

STEPH. Patience, my liege ;
 This is a woman that was never vex'd.

KING. You may boast it largely ; 'tis a subject's happiness
 Above a queen's. Have you suits to us ?

ROB. I am the suppliant plaintiff, royal Henry ;
 From me their griefs take their original.

KING. What art thou ?

ROB. Even what your grace shall please to make of me :

I was the son to this distressed father,
 Until he took his paternity off,
 And threw me from his love ; then I became
 Son to mine uncle by adoption ;

Who likewise that hath ta'en away again,
 And thrown me back to poverty : never was son
 So toss'd betwixt two fathers, yet knows not one ;
 For still the richest does despise his heir,
 And I am back expuls'd into despair.

KING. This may your vices cause.

ROB. For that I come

To your impartial censure for a doom.

KING. We hear ; speak on : we know the parties ;

Each one relate his grief, and if it lie in us,
 We'll yield relief : it is first requisite
 That we know of you, sir, the cause
 Of this your son his disinheritance.

O. Fos. Before I understood his virtuous mind,
 Or weigh'd his disposition to be kind,
 I did that froward work ; this now great man
 Was an unthrifty wretch, a prodigal then,
 And I disdain'd to know his brotherhood,
 Denied relief to him ; this child, kind and good,
 Against my contradiction, did him relieve,
 As his distressed uncle ; at this
 I chid, forbad. Still he holds on his course,
 He grows more kind, and he in wasting worse ;
 My rage continued, as it had begun,
 And in that rage I threw away my son.

STEPH. The like plead I, my lord : for when my state

Had rais'd itself by an uncertain fate,
 I took this outcast child, made him my own,
 As full and free as I myself had sown
 The seed that brought him forth ; for this my love
 His oblig'd duty presently did prove
 A traitor to my trust, against my will Succouring that foe which I did love so ill
 Only for hating him. My charity being thus Abus'd, and quit with injury, what could I then
 But, as his father erst, so I again

Might throw him from my love ? for worse is love abus'd

Than new-born hate, and should be so refus'd :
I did a father's part, if it were bad,
Blame him for both, there I my pattern had.

KING. You fall betwixt two pillars, sir ; is't not so ?

ROB. Unhappy fate, my lord ; yet thus I plead :
For this my father's hate I might deserve,
I broke his precepts, and did unchildly swerve
From his commission ; I to my uncle gave
What was my father's, striving thereby to save
His fall'n repute ; he rag'd ; I did it still,
Yet must confess, as it was well, 'twas ill ;
Well in my love, methought, ill to my fate,
For I thereby ruin'd my own estate :
But that mine uncle throws me forth of door,
For the same cause he took me in before,
Beats sorest 'gainst my bosom. If 'twere good
To take from a father for an uncle's food
In laws of love and nature, how much rather Might I abridge an uncle for a father ?
Charity's a virtue generally stands,
And should dispersed be through all men's hands.
Then would you keep't alone ? For when your heir
I first adopted was, charity was there :
How errs your judgment then ? seeing, you see,
What was good in you, makes sin in me.
You'll say my father did it : O, throw away
That foul excuse ; let not discretion stray.
So far aside ; if custom lawful make,
Then sin were lawful for example sake ;
Nor were those wasted goods only your own,
Since part was mine having adoption ;
Then do me right, my lord, yet do no wrong,
For where my duty fail'd, my love was strong.

KING. With an impartial ear we have heard
Your loving story ; 'tis both fair and honest.

STEPH. O, let me now anticipate your grace,
 And, casting off the shadow of a face,
 Show my heart's true figure ; how have I striv'd
 To make this forced counterfeit long-liv'd,
 And now it bursts. Come (both) into my heart,
 I have two jewels here shall never part
 From my love's eye-watch ; too worthy to be fil'd
 On time's best record, a woman and a child.
 (To O. Fos). Now, sir, to you I come ; we must be friends,

Though envy wills not so, yet love contends
 'Gainst envy and her forces ; my young years
 Say I must offer first a peace in tears.

O. Fos. O, let my shame my bosom's centre break !

Love is so young, it coys, but cannot speak.

KING. You bless mine eyes with objects that become

The theatre of kings to look upon.

STEPH. The keeper is discharg'd, sir ; your debts are paid,

And from the prison you're a free man made :

There's not a creditor can ask you ought.

As your son did for me, so have I bought

Your liberty with mine ; and to increase it more,

Because I know bare liberty is poor

Without assistance : to raise your state again,

The thirds of mine are yours, [To WIFE] say you amen ?

WIFE. No, not to that, you are kind brothers
 now,

Divide by halves that love, and I'll allow.

STEPH. Thou art only wise in virtue ; as thou sett'st down,

So let it be. Half my estate's your own.

O. Fos. It whole redounds again, for I am
 yours ;

Forget this minute my forgetful hours. . . .

STEPH. O, they are buried all, sir!

KING. This union's good;
Such league should ever be in brotherhood.

STEPH. Yet without boast, my liege, let me relate

One small thing more — remorse of my own state,

And my dear brother's worse succession:
For that we both have prisoners been in one
Selfsame place of woe, and felt those throes,
That Ludgate yields: my charity bestows
Some alms of comfort: keeper, you can speak it.

KEEP. And many hundred more, sir: you have re-edified

And built it fair, adding more ground to it,
And by pipes of lead from Paddington, drawn
Water thither free for all prisoners: lodgings
Likewise free, and a hundred pounds yearly, to make Them fires for better comfort: all this is almost finish'd.

KING. A worthy work! the better being done
In the founder's eye, not left unto succession.

STEPH. O my good lord, I ever kept in mind
An English sentence, which my tutor is,
And teaches me to act my charity
With mine own hands; so doubtful is performance,

When the benefactor's dead.

KING. What is't, I prythee?

STEPH. This, my good lord:
*Women are forgetful, children unkind,
Executors covetous, and take what they find:
If any man ask, where the dead's goods became,
The executor swears he died a poor man.*¹

¹ [This is a somewhat corrupt form of a saying to be found in Stowe. See Hazlitt's "Proverbs," 1869, p. 480.]

KING. You have prevented well, so has this good alderman ;

I wish you many scholars.

WIFE. [To STEPH.] You make some doubts of me in this, sir :

Did you not say that women are forgetful ?

KING. You have vex'd her now, sir : how do you answer that ?

STEPH. No, my lord, she's exempt from the proverb.

WIFE. No, my lord, I'll help it better : I do confess

That women are forgetful, yet ne'ertheless
I am exempt : I know my fate, and find
My dear husband must not leave me behind,
But I must go before him ;¹ and 'tis said,
The grave's good rest when women go first to bed.

STEPH. Thanks for thy excuse, good wife, but not thy love

To fill my grave before me : I would not live to see that day.

WIFE. Prythee, no more, I had rather be angry than flatter'd.

KING. You have a wonder, master sheriff ; a priceless jewel.

STEPH. Many jewels, my good lord ; a brother, wife, and child,

For this I would have strove even with a father :
Howe'er rough storms did in my brows appear,
Within my bosom it was always clear.

O. FOS. I give him to you now, sir.

STEPH. I take him, and to him back do give
All that myself behind in 'state shall leave.

O. FOS. And all that you gave me, I do bestow ;
So in one hour become full heir to two.

¹ This lady proved a false prophetess.

THE ORDINARY

EDITION.

*The Ordinary, a Comedy, Written by William Cartwright, M.A. Ch. Ch. Oxon. London, Printed for Humphrey Moseley, and are to be sold at his shop at the Sign of The Princes Armes in St Paul's Churchyard. 1651. 8°.*¹

¹ [This forms part of a somewhat thick volume, containing the author's poems and plays, with his portrait by Lombart, and an extraordinarily long series of introductory verses.] Among them are verses by a number of men of little note; but this can hardly be said of the contributions of Jasper Mayne, James Howell, Sir R. Stapylton, H. Vaughan (Silurist), Alexander Brome, and Izaak Walton. M. Lluellin has also added an ode to the collection; and another poem on Cartwright is to be found in his, "Men, Miracles, and other Poems," 1646.—Collier.

INTRODUCTION.

WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT was, according to Lloyd,¹ born the 16th of August 1615, though Wood² says he was born at Northway, near Tewksbury, Gloucestershire, in September 1611, and christened on the 26th of the same month. There is as much difference between these two writers, with respect to his father, as there is concerning the time of his birth. Lloyd says he was the son of Thomas Cartwright of Burford, in Oxfordshire. Wood asserts that his father's name was William Cartwright, one who had dissipated a fair inheritance, and was at last reduced to keep an inn at Cirencester. These contradictory accounts are totally irreconcilable. Wood's, however, is probably the true one.³ That author says that Cartwright received part of his education under Mr William Top, master of the Free School at Cirencester; was from thence sent to Westminster, where he completed his education under Mr Lambert Osbaldiston; and in the year 1628⁴ was chosen a student of Christ Church in Oxford, and placed under the care of Mr Terrent. He took his several degrees of Bachelor and Master of Arts—the latter in 1635; and afterwards entering into holy orders, became, as Wood⁵

¹ "Memoirs," p. 422.

² "Athen. Oxon." p. 34.

³ Ibid.

⁴ Langbaine, p. 51, says 1631.

⁵ "Athen. Oxon." ii. p. 35.

expresses it, "the most florid and seraphical preacher in the University." In October 1642, Bishop Duppa conferred on him the place of Succentor in the Church of Salisbury; and on the 12th of April 1643, he was admitted junior proctor of the University. He died the 29th of November following of a malignant fever, universally lamented by every person who knew him, even by his sovereign, who showed him particular marks of his respect.¹ He was buried at the upper end of the south aisle, adjoining to the choir of the cathedral of Christ Church. "He was," says Langbaine, "extremely remarkable both for his outward and inward endowments, his body being as handsome as his soul. He was an expert linguist, understanding not only Greek and Latin, but French and Italian, as perfectly as his mother tongue. He was an excellent orator, and yet an admirable poet, a quality which Cicero, with all his pains, could not attain to. Nor was Aristotle less known to him than Cicero and Virgil; and those who heard his metaphysical lectures gave him the preference to all his predecessors, the present Bishop of Lincoln (Dr Barlow) excepted. His sermons were as much admired as his other compositions; and one fitly applied to our author that saying of Aristotle concerning Æschion the poet, that he could not tell what Æschion could not do."

Ben Jonson said of him with some passion, My son Cartwright writes all like a man; and Dr Fell, Bishop of Oxford, gave him this character : Cartwright was the utmost man could come to.

¹ Oldys, in his MSS. notes on Langbaine, says that the king being asked why he appeared in black the day Cartwright was buried, answered, that since the Muses had so much mourned for the loss of such a son, it would be a shame for him not to appear in mourning for the loss of such a subject.

Besides a sermon and some Greek and Latin poems, he was the author of four plays, one only of which, I believe, was published in his lifetime, viz.—

1. "The Royal Slave, a Tragi-Comedy, presented to the king and queen by the students of Christ Church in Oxford, August 30, 1636 ; presented since to both their majesties, at Hampton Court, by the king's servants." 4°, 1639-40 ; 8vo, 1651.

This play, in which the celebrated Dr Busby performed a part, gave so much satisfaction to their majesties, that it was by their orders performed at Hampton Court by their own servants. Langbaine says the preference was given to the representation by the collegians, as much superior to that of the players.

2. "The Lady Errant, a Tragi-Comedy."

3. "The Ordinary, a comedy," [probably written in 1634.]

4. "The Siege ; or, Love's Convert, a Tragi-Comedy."

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

HEARSAY, an intelligencer.

SLICER, a lieutenant.

MEANWELL (Littleworth disguised), a decayed knight's son.

} complices in the Ordinary.

SHAPE, a cheater.

SIR THOMAS BITEFIG, a covetous knight.

SIMON CREDULOUS, a citizen.

ANDREW, his son, suitor to Mistress Jane.

ROBERT MOTH, an antiquary.

CASTER,

HAVE-AT-ALL, } gamesters.

RIMEWELL, a poet.

BAGSHOT, a decayed clerk.

SIR CHRISTOPHER, a curate.

VICAR CATCHMEY, a cathedral singing-man.

} clubbers at the Ordinary.

MISTRESS JANE, daughter to Sir Thomas.

PRISCILLA, her maid.

JOAN POTLUCK, a vintner's widow.

Shopkeeper, Chirurgion, Officers, Servants.

The scene, London.

THE PROLOGUE.

'TWOULD wrong our author to bespeak your ears ;
Your persons he adores, but judgment fears :
For where you please but to dislike, he shall
Be atheist thought, that worships not his fall.
Next to not marking, 'tis his hope that you,
Who can so ably judge, can pardon too.
His conversation will not yet supply
Follies enough to make a comedy :
He cannot write by th' poll ; nor act we here
Scenes, which perhaps you should see liv'd elsewhere.

No guilty line traduceth any ; all
We now present is but conjectural ;
'Tis a mere guess : those then will be to blame
Who make that person, which he meant but name.
That web of manners which the stage requires,
That mass of humours which poetic fires
Take in, and boil, and purge, and try, and then
With sublimated follies cheat those men
That first did vent them, are not yet his art ;
But, as drown'd islands or the world's fifth part,
Lie undiscover'd ; and he only knows
Enough to make himself ridiculous.
Think, then, if here you find nought can delight,
He hath not yet seen vice enough to write.

THE ORDINARY.

ACT I., SCENE I.

HEARSAY, SLICER, SHAPE, MEANWELL.

HEAR. We're made, my boys, we're made! me-thinks I am

Growing into a thing that will be worshipp'd.

SLICER. I shall sleep one day in my chain and scarlet

At Spital-sermon.

SHAPE. Were not my wit such,
I'd put out moneys of being Mayor.
But, O this brain of mine! that's it that will Bar me the city honour.

HEAR. We're cri'd up
O' th' sudden for the sole tutors of the age.

SHAPE. Esteem'd discreet, sage trainers up of youth.

HEAR. Our house becomes a place of visit now.

SLICER. In my poor judgment, 'tis as good my lady

Should venture to commit her eldest son
To us as to the Inns-of-Court: He'll be Undone here, only with less ceremony.

HEAR. Speak for our credit, my brave man of war.
What, Meanwell, why so lumpish?

MEAN. Pray you, be quiet.

HEAR. Thou look'st as if thou plott'st the calling in

O' th' Declaration, or the abolishing¹
O' th' common prayers. Cheer up ; say something for us.

MEAN. Pray, vex me not.

SLICER. These foolish, puling sighs
Are good for nothing, but to endanger buttons.
Take heart of grace, man.²

MEAN. Fie, y' are troublesome !

HEAR. Nay, fare you well then, sir.

[Exeunt HEARSAY, SLICER, SHAPE.

MEAN. My father still

Runs in my mind, meets all my thoughts, and doth
Mingle himself in all my cogitations.
Thus to see eager villains drag along
Him unto whom they crouch'd ! to see him hal'd,
That ne'er knew what compulsion was, but when
His virtues did incite him to good deeds,
And keep my sword dry ! O unequal nature !
Why was I made so patient as to view,
And not so strong as to redeem ? Why should I
Dare to behold, and yet not dare to rescue ?
Had I been destitute of weapons, yet
Arm'd with the only name of son, I might Have outdone wonder. Naked piety

¹ The Declaration concerning "The Book of Sports," set forth some time before. This was a matter very disgusting to the Puritans, who had an equal dislike to the Book of Common Prayer.

² This phrase signifies take courage, or summon up resolution. It is at present always written in this manner ; formerly it used, [very erroneously,] to be, take heart at grass ; as in "Euphuus," p. 18 : "Rise, therefore, Euphuus, and take heart at grasse, younger thou shalt never bee : plucke up thy stomacke, if love have stong thee, it shall not stifle thee."

Again, in Tarlton's "Newes out of Purgatory," p. 4 : "Therefore taking heart at grasse, drawing more neere him," &c.

And Ibid., p. 24 : "Seeing she would take no warning : on a day tooke heart at grasse, and belabour'd her well with a cudgel."

Dares more than fury well-appointed;¹ blood
 Being never better sacrificed, than when
 It flows to him that gave it. But, alas!
 The envy of my fortune did allow
 That only which she could not take away—
 Compassion, that which was not in those savage
 And knowing beasts, those engines of the law
 That even killed as uncontroll'd as that.
 How do I grieve when I consider from What hands he suffer'd! Hands that do excuse
 Th' indulgent prison, shackles being here
 A kind of rescue. Young man, 'tis not well
 To see thy aged father thus confin'd.
 Good, good old man! alas! thou'rt dead to me,
 Dead to the world, and only living to
 That which is more than death, thy misery!
 The grave could be a comfort: and shall I—
 O, would this soul of mine— But death's the wish
 Of him that fears; he's lazy that would die.
 I'll live and see that thing of wealth, that worm
 Bred out of splendid muck, that citizen,
 Like his own sullied wares thrown by into
 Some unregarded corner; and my piety
 Shall be as famous as his avarice.
 His son, whom we have in our tuition,
 Shall be the subject of my good revenge:
 I'll count myself no child, till I have done Something that's worth that name. My brain shall be
 Busy in his undoing; and I will Plot ruin with religion: his disgrace

¹ Well-appointed is completely accoutred. So in "The Miseries of Queen Margaret," by Drayton—

"Ten thousand vallant well-appointed men;"

and in the "Second Part of Henry IV." act iv. sc. 1—

"What well-appointed leader fronts us here!"

—Mr Steevens's note on the last passage.

Shall be my zeal's contrivement ; and when this Shall style me son again, I hope 'twill be Counted not wrong, but duty. When that time
 Shall give my actions growth, I will cast off
 This brood of vipers, and will show that I
 Do hate the poison which I meant t' apply. [Exit.]

SCENE II.

MISTRESS POTLUCK.

POT. Now help, good heaven ! 'tis such an uncouth thing

To be a widow out of term-time : I
 Do feel such aguish qualms and dumps, and fits,
 And shakings still an end ! I lately was
 A wife, I do confess ; but yet I had
 No husband ; he, alas ! was dead to me,
 Even when he lived unto the world : I was A widow, whilst he breath'd. His death did only
 Make others know so much ; but yet——

Enter HEARSAY.

HEAR. How now ?
 So melancholy, sweet ?

POT. How could I choose,
 Being thou wert not here ? The time is come :
 Thou'lt be as good unto me as thy word ?

HEAR. Nay, hang me, if I e'er recant. You'll take me.

Both wind and limb at th' venture, will you not ?

POT. Ay, good chuck, every inch of thee ; she were no true woman that would not.

HEAR. I must tell you one thing—and yet I'm loth.

POT. I am thy rib,
Thou must keep nothing from thy rib, good chuck :
Thy yoke-fellow must know all thy secrets.

HEAR. Why then, I'll tell you, sweet.

[He whispers her.]

POT. Heaven defend !

HEAR. 'Tis true.

POT. Now, God forbid ! and would you offer
T' undo a widow-woman so ? I had
As lief the old vintner were alive again.

HEAR. I was born¹ with it, I confess ; but lying
In Turkey for intelligence, the Great Turk, Somewhat suspicious of me, lest I might Entice some o' th' seraglio, did command
I should be forthwith cut.

POT. A heathen deed

It was ! none but an infidel could have
The heart to do it.

HEAR. Now you know the worst
That you must trust to. Come, let's to the church.

POT. Good Master Hearsay, nature ne'er intended

One woman should be joined to another :
The holy blessing of all wedlock was
T' increase and multiply, as Master Christopher Did well observe last Sabbath. I'll not do Anything 'gainst God's word. I do release you
Of all your promises ; and that it may not Be said you lost by loving me, take this.
Perhaps I may get you a contribution
O' th' women of the parish, as I did
The broken-bellied man the other day.

HEAR. Seeing you needs will cast me off, let me
Entreat this one thing of you : that you would not Make me your table-talk at the next gossiping.

[Exit.]

¹ [Old copy, not born.]

POT. Indeed I pity thee, poor thing ; or rather
I pity thee, poor nothing !

Enter SLICER.

Good lieutenant,
How dost thou ? Thou art mindful of thy promise.

SLICER. What else, my jolly wench ?

POT. Good sweet lieutenant,
Give me but leave to ask one question of you :
Art thou entire and sound in all thy limbs ?

SLICER. To tell the very truth, ere now I've had

A spice o' the pox or so ; but now I am sound
As any bell—hem ! was't not shrill, my girl ? ha !

POT. I do not ask thee about these diseases :
My question is, whether thou'st all thy parts ?

SLICER. Faith, I have lost a joint or two ; as none

Of our profession come off whole, unless
The general and some sneaks.

POT. My meaning is,
Whether that something is not wanting that Should write thee husband ?

SLICER. Ne'er fear that, my wench :
Dost think the king would send me to the wars
Without I had my weapons ? Eunuchs are not Men of employment in these days. His majesty
Hath newly put me on a piece of service ;
And if I e'er come off (which I do fear
I sha'n't, the danger is so great) brave widow,
We'll to't, and get commanders.

POT. If you can

Leave me, I can leave you. There are other men
That won't refuse a fortune when 'tis proffer'd.

SLICER. Well, I must to his majesty : think
on't :

So fare thee well. Thine, to his very death,
That is, a month or two, perhaps, D. Slicer. [Exit.]

Enter SHAPE.

POT. Kind Master Shape, you are exceeding welcome.

Here hath been Master Hearsay and Lieutenant Slicer: you may guess at their business, but
I hope you think me faithful.

SHAPE. I believe
The memory of your husband's ashes, which Scarce yet are cold, extinguisheth all flames
That tend to kindling any love fire. 'Tis
A virtue in you which I must admire,
That only you, amongst so many, should
Be the sole turtle of the age.

POT. I do
Bear him in memory, I confess; but when I do remember what your promise was
When he lay sick, it doth take something from The bitterness of sorrow. Woman was Not made to be alone still.

SHAPE. Tender things
At seventeen may use that plea; but you
Are now arriv'd at matron. These young sparks
Are rak'd up, I presume, in sager embers.

POT. Nay, don't abuse her that must be your wife.
You might have pity, and not come with your nicknames,

And call me turtle. Have I deserved this?

SHAPE. If that you once hold merits, I have done.

I'm glad I know what's your religion.

POT. What's my religion? 'Tis well known there hath

Been no religion in my house, e'er since
My husband died.

Enter SLICER, HEARSAY.

HEAR. How now, sweet Shape? So close alone
Wi' your widow!

SHAPE. Sirs, dare you believe it?
This thing, whose prayer it hath been these ten
Years that she may obtain the second tooth
And the third hair, now doats on me; on me,
That do refuse all that are past sixteen.

SLICER. Why, faith, this was her suit to me just now.

HEAR. I had the first on't, then. A coachman or
A groom, were fitter far for her.

SLICER. You do
Honour her too much to think she deserves
A thing that can lust moderately: give her
The sorrel stallion in my lord's long stable.

SHAPE. Or the same-colour'd brother, which is worse.

POT. Why, gentlemen——

HEAR. Foh, foh! She hath let fly.

POT. D'you think I have no more manners than
so!

SHAPE. Nay, faith, I can excuse her for that;
but

I must confess she spoke, which is all one.

SLICER. Her breath would rout an army sooner than

That of a cannon.

HEAR. It would lay a devil
Sooner than all Trithemius' charms.¹

¹ See Wolfi "Opera," 1672, ii. 592.
Johannes Trithemius, abbè of the order of St Benedict, and one of the most learned men of the fifteenth century,

SHAPE. Hark how
It blusters in her nostrils, like a wind
In a foul chimney!

POT. Out, you base companions,
You stinking swabbers!

HEAR. For her gait, that's such
As if her nose did strive t' outrun her heels.

SHAPE. She's just six yards behind when that appears.
It saves an usher, madam.

was born at Tritenheim, in the diocese of Treves, the 1st of February 1462. After having studied for some time, he became a Benedictine friar, and abbot of Spanheim, in the diocese of Mayence, in 1483. He governed the abbey until the year 1506, when he joined the abbey of St James, at Wurtzburgh. He was learned in all sciences, divine and human, and died the 13th of December 1516.

Thevet calls him a subtle philosopher, an ingenious mathematician, a famous poet, an accomplished historian, a very eloquent orator, and eminent divine. Naudius says that those who would make him a magician ground their right on a little book of three or four sheets, printed in 1612, entitled, "Veterum Sophorum sigilla et imagines magicæ, sive sculptura lapidum aut gemmarum ex nomine Tetragrammaton cum signatura planetarum authoribus Zoroastre, Salomone Raphaelæ, Chæle Hermete Thelete, ex Joan Kithemii manuscripto erutæ." Secondly, his speaking so pertinently of magic, and giving himself the title of magician in some of his epistles. Thirdly, his writing the book of Steganography, a treatise stuffed with the names of devils, and full of invocations, and as very pernicious condemned by Boville as worse than Agrippa. To these Naudius answers that the pamphlet of making images and characters upon stones, under certain constellations, is a pure imposture and cheat of booksellers, it being printed above 120 years before by Camillus Lienard, as the third book of his "Mirror of Precious Stones, De Unguento Armario." From a letter then to a Carmelite of Gaunt, Arnoldus Bostius, the suspicion of his being a magician must be collected, wherein he specified many miraculous and extraordinary effects performed in his treatise of Steganography. This, however, is defended by several writers only as the means to decipher.—Naudius's "History of Magick," translated by Davies, p. 237, &c.

- POT. You are all
Most foul-mouth'd knaves to use a woman thus.
- SLICER. Your plaster'd face doth drop against moist weather.
- SHAPE. Fie, how you writhe it! Now it looks just like
A ruffled boot.
- SLICER. Or an oil'd paper-lantern.
- HEAR. Her nose the candle in the midst of it.
- SHAPE. How bright it flames! Put out your nose, good lady;
You burn daylight.¹
- POT. Come up, you lousy rascals.
- HEAR. Not upon you for a kingdom, good Joan.
The Great Turk, Joan, the Great Turk!
- SLICER. Kiss him, chuck;
Kiss him, chuck, open-mouth'd, and be reveng'd.
- POT. Hang you, base cheating varlet!
- SLICER. Don't you see
December in her face?
- SHAPE. Sure, the surveyor
Of the highways will have to do with her
For not keeping her countenance passable.
- HEAR. There lies a hoar-frost on her head, and yet
A constant thaw in her nose.
- SHAPE. She's like a piece
Of firewood, dropping at one end, and yet
Burning i' th' midst.
- SLICER. O that endeavouring face!
When will your costiveness have done, good
madam?
- HEAR. Do you not hear her guts already squeak Like kit-strings?
- SLICER. They must come to that within

¹ See note on the "Spanish Tragedy," [v. 115.]

This two or three years : by that time she'll be True perfect cat. They practise beforehand.

POT. I can endure no longer, though I should Throw off my womanhood.

HEAR. No need, that's done
Already : nothing left thee that may style thee Woman, but lust and tongue : no flesh but what
The vices of the sex exact, to keep them
In heart.

SHAPE. Thou art so lean and out of case,
That 'twere absurd to call thee devil incarnate.

SLICER. Th' art a dry devil, troubled with the lust
Of that thou hast not, flesh.

POT. Rogue, rascal, villain !
I'll show your cheating tricks, i' faith : all shall Be now laid open. Have I suffer'd you
Thus long i' my house, and ne'er demanded yet
One penny rent for this? I'll have it all :
By this good blessed light, I will !

HEAR. You may,
If that you please undo yourself ; you may :
I will not strive to hinder you. There is Something contriving for you, which may be Perhaps yet brought about : a match or so ;
A proper fellow : 'tis a trifle, that ;
A thing you care not for, I know. Have I
Plotted to take you off from these, to match you
In better sort, and am us'd thus ? As for
The rent-you ask, here take it ; take your money ;
Fill, choke your gaping throat : but if as yet
You are not deaf to counsel, let me tell you,
It had been better that you ne'er had took it ;
It may stop some proceedings.

POT. Master Hearsay,
You know you may have even my heart out of My belly (as they say), if you'll but take
The pains to reach it out. I am sometimes Peevish, I do confess. Here, take your money.

HEAR. No.

POT. Good sir.

HEAR. No, keep it and hoard it up ;
My purse is no safe place for it.

POT. Let me

Request you that you would be pleas'd to take it.

HEAR. Alas ! 'twould only trouble me : I can
As willingly go light as be your treasurer.

POT. Good Master Slicer, speak to him to take it.
Sweet Master Shape, join with him.¹

SLICER. Nay, be once
O'errul'd by a woman.

SHAPE. Come, come ; you shall take it.

POT. Nay, faith you shall. Here, put it up, good sir.

HEAR. Upon entreaty, I'm content for once ;
But make no custom oft. You do presume
Upon my easy foolishness : 'tis that Makes you so bold. Were it another man,
Hene'er would have to do with you. But mark me—
If e'er I find you in this mood again,
I'll dash your hopes of marriage for ever.

[Exeunt all but HEARSAY.]

SCENE III.

To him MEANWELL, ANDREW.

AND. God save you, tutors both !

MEAN. Fie, Andrew, fie !

What, kiss your hand ! You smell not compliment.

HEAR. Besides you come too near, when you salute.

¹ "Join with me," would suit the sense better, as she is asking Shape to unite his solicitations with hers. The old copy reads as it is reprinted.—Collier.

Your breath may be discover'd ; and you give Advantage unto him you thus accost
 To shake you by the hand : which often doth Endanger the whole arm. Your gallant's, like
 The crystal glass, brittle ; rude handling cracks
 him.

To be saluted so were to be wounded :
 His parts would fall asunder like unto Spill'd quicksilver. An ear, an eye, a nose,
 Would drop, like summer fruit from shaken trees.

MEAN. For the same reason, I'd not have you dance.

Some courtiers, I confess, do use it ; but
 They are the sounder sort ; those foolish ones
 That have a care of health, which you shall not,
 If you'll be rul'd by me. The hazard's great :
 'Tis an adventure, an exploit, no¹ piece
 Of service for a gentleman, to caper.

HEAR. A gallant's like a leg of mutton boil'd
 By a Spanish cook : take him but by the one end,
 And shake him, all the flesh falls from the bones,
 And leaves them bare immediately.

AND. I would
 Not be a leg of mutton here.

HEAR. I saw
 In France a monsieur, only in the cutting
 Of one cross caper, rise a man, and come Down, to th' amazement of the standers-by,
 A true extemporary skeleton ;
 And was straight read on.²

AND. Sure, this man,
 Good tutor, was quite rotten.

MEAN. See how you
 Betray your breeding now. Quite rotten ! 'Tis Rottenness, perhaps, in footmen or in yeomen :

¹ [Old copy, a.]

² [A lecture, probably, was delivered on the phenomenon.]

'Tis tenderness in gentlemen ; they are
A little over-boil'd, or so.

HEAR. He is
A churl, a hind, that's wholesome ; some raw thing
That never was at London : one in whom
The clown is too predominant. Refin'd People feel Naples in their bodies ; and
An ache i' th' bones at sixteen passeth now
For high descent : it argues a great birth.
Low bloods are never worthy such infection.

AND. Ay, but my father bid me I should live
Honest, and say my prayers ; that he did.

HEAR. If that you cannot sleep at any time, we do
Allow you to begin your pray'rs, that so
A slumber may seize on you.

MEAN. But as for
Your living honest, 'twere to take away
A trade i' th' commonwealth ! the surgeons'
Benefit would go down. You may go on
In foolish chastity, eat only salads,
Walk an unskilful thing, and be to learn Something the first night of your wife ; but that's
To marry out of fashion.

AND. Here's no proofs,
No doctrines, nor no uses. Tutor, I
Would fain learn some religion.

HEAR. Religion !
Yes, to become a martyr, and be pictur'd
With a long label out o' your mouth, like those In Fox's book ;¹ just like a juggler drawing
Riband out of his throat.

¹ [The "Book of the Acts and Monuments," &c., 1563, &c.
The woodcuts have the dying words of the martyrs printed on labels out of their mouths, in the way mentioned in the text.]

AND. I must be gone.

MEAN. Obedience is the first step unto science:
Stay, and be wise.

AND. Indeed, I dare not stay;
The clyster works you sent to purge gross humours.
[Exit.

MEAN. Being you will not take your lecture out, Good-morrow to y', good Andrew. This soft fool
Must swim in's father's wealth! It is a curse
That fortune justly makes the city's lot;
The young fool spends whate'er the old knave got.
[Exit MEANWELL.

SCENE IV.

To HEARSAY enter SLICER and CREDULOUS.

HEAR. Sir, let me tell you, this is not the least
Of things wherein your wisdom shows itself,
In that you've plac'd your son in this good sort.

CRE. Nay, nay, let me alone to give him breeding:

I did not hold the university
Fit for the training up of such a spirit.

SLICER. The university! 'T had been the only way

T' have took him off his courage and his mettle:
He had return'd, as slaves do from the galleys:
A naked shorn thing, with a thin-dock'd top,
Learnedly cut into a logic mode.

HEAR. A private oath given him at first entrance,
Had sworn him pilgrim unto conventicles;
Engag'd him to the hate of all, but what Pleaseth the stubborn, froward elect.

SLICER. But we,
Following another model, do allow

Freedom and courage, cherish and maintain High noble thoughts——

HEAR. Set nature free, and are Chemists of manners——

SLICER. Do instruct of states——

HEAR. And wars. There's one, look on him——

SLICER. Do but view
That searching head——

HEAR. The very soul of battle :
True steel.

SLICER. H' hath been an agent some few years
(A score or so) for princes, and as yet
Doth not write forty.

HEAR. I confess I can Discover th' entrails of a state perhaps.
Lay open a kingdom's paunches, show the bowels
And inwards of a signiory or two ;
But for your deeds of valour, there is one,
Although I speak it to his face, that can Write a geography by his own conquests :
H' hath fought o'er Strabo,¹ Ptolemy,² and Stafford ;³
Travell'd as far in arms as Lithgow⁴ naked ;

¹ Strabo, a philosopher of Crete and a geographer in the time of Augustus.

² Born at Pelusium, flourished about the year 140, and died 162, aged 78.

³ Robert Stafford, born at Dublin, was of Exeter College, Oxford, and published "A Geographical and Anthological description of all the Empires and Kingdoms, both of Continent and Islands, in this terrestrial Globe," &c., 1607. Wood says it was reported that John Prideaux, who was Stafford's tutor, had the chief hand in this work.

⁴ [Naked, i.e., unarmed.] William Lithgow, a Scotsman, whose sufferings by imprisonment and torture at Malaga, and whose travels on foot over Europe, Asia, and Africa, seem to raise him almost to the rank of a martyr and a hero, published an account of his peregrinations and adventures, 1614 ; reprinted in 1616, &c., with additions. At the conclusion of this work he says, "Here is the just relation of

Borne weapons whither Coriat¹ durst not Carry a shirt or shoes. Jack Mandevile²
 Ne'er sail'd so far as he hath steer'd by land,
 Using his colours both for mast and sail.

CRE. I'd thought h' had been lieutenant.

HEAR. That's all one.

SLICER. I've worn some leather out abroad, let out
 A heathen soul or two, fed this good sword nineteene yeares travells, perited in three deare bought voyages: the generall computation of which dimmensions spaces in my goings, traversings, and returnings through kingdomes, continents, and ilands, which my payneful feet traced over (besides my passages of seas and rivers) amounteth to thirty-six thousand and odde miles; which draweth neare to twice the circumference of the whole earth." [A list of his other works may be found in Hazlitt's "Handbook," 1867, in v.]

¹ The celebrated Thomas Coriat who, except Lithgow, is supposed to have travelled more miles on foot than any person of his times, or indeed in any period since. From his writings, and many parts of his conduct, he cannot be supposed to have been in his perfect senses. He was, notwithstanding, a man of considerable learning, and rendered himself ridiculous, chiefly by dwelling with too much attention on the trifling accidents which happened to him during his journey. In the year 1608 he left England and went to Venice and back again; a journey performed on foot in five months. On his return, he published an account of it in a large quarto volume, 1611, containing 655 pages, besides more than 100 filled with commendatory verses by Ben Jonson and other wits of the age, who both laughed at and flattered him at the same time. He afterwards travelled into Persia, and from thence into the East Indies (still on foot), and died at Surat in the year 1617.

² Sir John Mandevile, Knight, born at St Albans. He was a traveller for the space of thirty-four years, visiting in that time Scythia, Armenia the Greater and Less, Egypt, both Libyas, Arabia, Syria, Media, Mesopotamia, Persia, Chaldaea, Greece, Illyriun, Tartary, and divers other kingdoms. He died at Liege, November 17, 1371. An edition of his travels was printed in 8°, 1725, from a MS. in the Cotton Library.

With the black blood of pagan Christians,
 Converted a few infidels with it ;
 But let that pass. That man of peace there hath Been trusted with kings' breasts——

HEAR. His name is heard
 Like thunder, and that mere word Slicer hath Sufficed unto victory.

SLICER. He's close,
 Reserv'd, lock'd up. The secrets of the King
 Of Tartary, of China, and some other
 Counsels of moment, have been so long kept In's body without vent, that every morning,
 Before he covers them with some warm thing
 Or other, you may smell 'em very strongly ;
 Distinguish each of them by several scents——

HEAR. A grove of pikes are rushes to him :
 hail

More frights you than a shower of bullets him——

SLICER. The Dutch come up like broken beer ;¹
 the Irish

Savour of usquebaugh ; the Spanish they Smell like unto perfume at first, but then
 After a while end in a fatal steam——

HEAR. One drum's his table, the other is his music :

¹ ["The leavings of what has been drawn for others"—Gifford (edit. of Ben Jonson, vii. 433).] So in Jonson's "Masque of Augurs:" "The poor cattle yonder are passing away the time with a cheat loaf and a bumbard of broken beer."

Again, in the "Masque of Gypsies:" "He were very carefully carried at his mother's back, rocked in a cradle of Welsh cheese, like a maggot, and there fed with broken beer and blown wine of the best daily."

And in Scot's "Belgicke Pismire," 1622, p. 76: "Having before fed themselves full with the sweat of other mens browes, even to gluttonie, drunkenesse, and surfetting, may relieve with their scraps, crummes, bones and broken beere, the necessities of such as they or their predecessors have before undone and made beggers."

His sword's his knife ; his colours are his napkins ;
 Carves nourishing horse, as he is us'd to do
 The hostile paynim,¹ or we venison ; eats
 Gunpowder with his meat instead of pepper,
 Then drinks o'er all his bandoleers, and fights——

SLICER. Secrets are rank'd and order'd in his belly,

Just like tobacco-leaves laid in a sweat.
 Here lies a row of Indian secrets, then Something of's own on them ; on that, another
 Of China counsels, cover'd with a lid
 Of Newfoundland discoveries : next, a bed
 Of Russia policies ; on them, a lay
 Of Prester-Johnian whispers——

HEAR. Slights a tempest ;
 Counts lightning but a giving fire, and thunder
 The loud report when heaven hath discharg'd.
 H' hath with his breath ² suppli'd a breach :
 When he's once fix'd, no engine can remove him.

SLICER. 'Twould be a policy worth hatching to Have him dissected, if 'twere not too cruel.
 All states would lie as open as his bowels :
 Turkey in's bloody liver ; Italy
 Be found in's reins ; Spain busy in his stomach ;
 Venice would float in's bladder ; Holland sail
 Up and down all his veins ; Bavaria lie
 Close in some little gut, and ragioni
*Di Stato*³ generally reek in all.

CRE. I see my son's too happy : he is born
 To be some man of action ; some engine
 For th' overthrow of kingdoms.

HEAR. Troth, he may Divert the torrent of the Turkish rule

¹ [Old copy, paguim.]

² Qy. breadth, i.e., stopped a breach by his person.—
Collier.

³ [Reasons or policies of state.]

Into some other track : dam up the stream
Of that vast headlong monarchy, if that
He want not means to compass his intents.

CRE. The Turkish monarchy's a thing too big
For him to manage : he may make perhaps
The governor of some new little island,
And there plant faith and zeal ; but for the present,
M' ambition's only to contrive a match
Between Sir Thomas Bitefig's only daughter
And (if I may so call him now) my son :
'Twill raise his fortunes somewhat.

SLICER. We have got
One that will do more good with's tongue that way
Than that uxorious show'r that came from heaven :
But you must oil it first.

CRE. I understand you :
Grease him i' th' fist, you mean ? There's just ten pieces ;
'Tis but an earnest : if he bring 't about,
I'll make those ten a hundred.

HEAR. Think it done.

[Exit CREDULOUS, and enter SHAPE and MEANWELL.

SCENE V.

HEARSAY, SLICER, MEANWELL, SHAPE.

HEAR. Our life, methinks, is but the same with others :

To cosen and be cosen'd makes the age.
The prey and feeder are that civil thing
That sager heads call body politic.
Here is the only difference : others cheat
By statute, but we do't upon no grounds.
The fraud's the same in both ; there only wants Allowance to our way. The commonwealth

Hath not declar'd herself as yet for us ;
Wherefore our policy must be our charter.

MEAN. Well-manag'd knav'ry is but one degree
Below plain honesty.

SLICER. Give me villany,
That's circumspect and well-advis'd, that doth Colour at least for goodness. If the cloak
And mantle were pull'd off from things, 'twould be
As hard to meet an honest action as
A liberal alderman or a court-nun.

HEAR. Knowing, then, how we must direct our steps,
Let us chalk out our paths : you, Shape, know
yours.

SHAPE. Where'er I light on fortune, my commission
Will hold to take her up : I'll ease my silken
Friends of that idle luggage we call money.

HEAR. For my good toothless countess, let us try

To win that old eremite thing that, like
An image in a German clock,¹ doth move,
Not walk—I mean, that rotten antiquary.

MEAN. He'll surely love her, 'cause she looks like some

Old ruin'd piece, that was five ages backward.

HEAR. To the great vestry-wit, the livery-brain,
My common-council pate, that doth determine
A city-business with his gloves on's head,
We must apply good hope of wealth and means.

SLICER. That griping knight Sir Thomas must be call'd

With the same lure : he knows t' a crumb how much

¹ German clocks were about this time much in use. They are frequently mentioned by Ben Jonson and other writers.
—See "Epicæne," act iv. sc. 2.

Loss is in twenty dozen of bread, between
 That which is broke by th' hand and that is cut.
 Which way best keep his candles, bran or straw :
 What tallow's lost in putting of 'em out
 By spittle, what by foot, what by the puff,
 What by the holding downwards, and what by
 The extinguisher ; which wick will longest be
 In lighting, which spend fastest. He must hear
 Nothing but moieties, and lives, and farms,
 Copies, and tenures ; he is deaf to th' rest.

MEAN. I'll speak the language of the wealthy to
 him ;

My mouth shall swill with bags, revenues, fees,
 Estates, reversions, incomes, and assurance[s].
 He's in the gin already ; for his daughter,
 She'll be an easy purchase.¹

HEAR. I do hope
 We shall grow famous ; have all sorts repair
 As duly to us, as the barren wives
 Of aged citizens do to St Antholin's.
 Come, let us take our quarters ; we may come
 To be some great officers in time,
 And with a reverend magisterial frown
 Pass sentence on those faults that are our own.

[Exeunt omnes.]

ACT II., SCENE I.

HAVE-AT-ALL, SLICER, HEARSAY having rescued him in a quarrel.

HAVE. 'Tis destin'd ; I'll be valiant : I am sure
 I shall be beaten with more credit than Than now I do escape. Lieutenant, has't
 Bethought thyself as yet ? Has't any way
 To make my sword fetch blood ?

¹ i.e., Prize [or acquisition].—Collier.

SLICER. You never yet
Did kill your man, then?

HAVE. No.

HEAR. Nor get your wench
With child, I warrant?

HAVE. O sir!

SLICER. You're not quite
Free of the gentry, till y' have marr'd one man
And made another. When one fury hath Cried quit with t'other, and your lust repair'd
What anger hath destroy'd, the title's yours;
Till then you do but stand for't.

HAVE. Pox! who'd be
That vile, scorn'd name, that stuffs all court-gate bills?

Lieutenant, thou may'st teach me valour yet.

SLICER. Teach thee! I will inspire thee; man,
I'll make

Thy name become a terror; and to say
That Have-at-all is coming shall make room,
As when the bears are in procession.

Hark hither, Frank—— [They consult.]

HEAR. That's good, but——

SLICER. How think'st now?

HEAR. Nay, he will pay you large—ly. [Aloud.]

HAVE. Pay, what else?

HEAR. Make him believe the citizen's his guest;
The citizen, that he is his.

SLICER. Concluded.

Would you fight fair, or conquer by a spell?

HAVE. I do not care for witchcraft; I would have

My strength rely merely upon itself.

SLICER. There is a way, though I ne'er show'd it yet

But to one Spaniard, and 'twas wondrous happy.

HAVE. Think me a second Spaniard, worthy
sir.

SLICER. Then listen. The design is by a dinner—
 An easy way, you'll say : I'll say, a true.
 Hunger may break stone walls, it ne'er hurts men :
 Your cleanly feeder is your man of valour.
 What makes the peasant grovel in his muck,
 Humbling his crooked soul, but that he eats
 Bread just in colour like it ? Courage ne'er
 Vouchsaf'd to dwell a minute where a sullen
 Pair of brown loaves darken'd the dirty table ;
 Shadows of bread, not bread. You never knew
 A solemn son of bag-pudding and pottage
 Make a commander, or a tripe-eater
 Become a tyrant. He's the kingdom's arm
 That can feed large and choicely.

HAVE. If that be
 The way, I'll eat myself into courage,
 And will devour valour enough quickly.

SLICER. 'Tis not the casual eating of those meats
 That doth procure those spirits, but the order
 And manner of the meal—the ranking of
 The dishes, that does all ; else he that hath
 The greatest range, would be the hardiest man.
 Those goodly juments of the guard would fight
 (As they eat beef) after six stone a day ;
 The spit would nourish great attempts : my lord
 Would lead a troop, as well as now a masque ;
 And force the enemy's sword with as much ease
 As his mistress's bodkin : gallants would Owe valour to their ordinaries, and fight
 After a crown meal.

HAVE. I do conceive
 The art is all in all. If that you'll give
 A bill of your directions, I'll account
 Myself oblig'd unto you for my safety.

SLICER. Take it then thus. All must be soldierlike ;
 No dish but must present artillery ;
 Some military instrument in each.

Imprimis, six or seven yards of tripe.
Display'd instead o' th' ensign.

HAVE. Why, you said
Tripe-eaters ne'er made tyrants.
SLICER. Peace, sir: learners
Must be attentive, and believe. Do y' think We'll eat this? 'Tis but for formality.
Item, a collar of good large fat brawn
Serv'd for a drum, waited upon by two Fair long black-puddings, lying by for drumsticks.

Item, a well-grown lamprey for a fife;
Next some good curious march-panes¹ made into
The form of trumpets. Then in order shall Follow the officers: the captain first
Shall be presented in a warlike cock,
Swimming in white broth, as he's wont in blood:
The serjeant-major he may bustle in
The shape of some large turkey: for myself,
Who am lieutenant, I'm content there be
A buzzard only. Let the corporal
Come sweating in a breast of mutton, stuff'd²
With pudding, or strut in some aged carp:
Either doth serve, I think. As for perdues,³
Some choice sous'd fish brought couchant in a dish
Among some fennel or some other grass,
Shows how they lie i' th' field. The soldier then
May be thus rank'd: the common one, chicken,
Duck, rabbit, pigeon; for the more genteel,

¹ March-pane was a confection made of pistachio nuts, almonds, sugar, &c., formerly in high esteem, and a constant article in the deserts of our ancestors. See the notes of Dr Gray, Mr Hawkins, and Mr Stevens, to "Romeo and Juliet," act i. sc. 5.

² This is called a St Stephen's pudding: it used formerly to be provided at St John's College, Cambridge, uniformly on St Stephen's day.—Pegge.

³ See [Suckling's Works, by Hazlitt, ii. 33.]

Snipe, woodcock, partridge, pheasant, quail, will serve.

HEAR. Bravely contriv'd!

SLICER. That weapons be not wanting,
We'll have a dozen of bones well-charg'd with marrow

For ordnance, muskets, petronels, petards;
Twelve yards of sausage by, instead of match;
And caveary¹ then prepar'd for wild-fire.

HEAR. Rare rogue! how I do love him now, methinks!

SLICER. Next we'll have true fat eatable old pikes,

Then a fresh turbot brought in for a buckler,
With a long spitchcock for the sword adjoin'd.
We'll bring the ancient weapons into play.

HAVE. Most rare, by heaven!

SLICER. Peaches, apricocks,
And malecotoons,² with other choicer plums,

¹ Or, caveare. Giles Fletcher, in his "Russe Commonwealth," 1591, p. 11, says: "In Russia they have divers kinds of fish, very good and delicate: as the Bellouga or Bellougina, of four or five elnes long; the Ostrina or Sturgeon, but not so thicke nor long. These four kinds of fish breed in the Volgha, and are catched in great plenty, and served thence into the whole realme for a great food. Of the roes of these foure kinds, they make very great store of Icary, or caveary."

The introduction of these foreign delicacies is ridiculed by several writers of the times; as Ben Jonson's "Cynthia's Revels," act iii. sc. 1: "Come, let us go and taste some light dinner, a dish of sliced caviare, or so."

And in Marston's "What you Will," act ii. sc. 1—

"A man can scarce put on a tuckt-up cap,
A button'd frizado suite; scarce eate good meate,
Anchovies, caviars, but hee's satired,
And term'd phantasticall."

² The malacoton is one of the late peaches. So in Ben Jonson's "Bartholomew Fair"—

"A soft velvet head like a mallicotton."

Will serve for large-sized bullets ; then a dish
 Or two of peas for small ones. I could now
 Tell you of pepper in the stead of powder,
 But that 'tis not in fashion 'mongst us gallants.
 If this might all stand upon drum-heads, 'twould
 Work somewhat better.

HAVE. Will't so? Then we'll have 'em
 From every ward i' th' city.

SLICER. No, I'm loth
 To put you to such charge. For once a long
 Table shall-serve the turn ; 'tis no great matter.
 The main thing's still behind. We must have there

Some fort to scale ; a venison-pasty doth it.
 You may have other pies instead of outworks :
 Some sconces would not be amiss, I think.
 When this is all prepar'd, and when we see
 The table look like a pitch'd battle, then We'll give the word, fall to, slash, kill and spoil :

Destruction, rapine, violence ! spare none.

HEAR. Thou hast forgotten wine, lieutenant—wine.

SLICER. Then to avoid the gross absurdity
 Of a dry battle, 'cause there must some blood
 Be spill'd (on th' enemies' side, I mean) you may Have there a rundlet of brisk claret, and
 As much of alicant ; the same quantity
 Of tent would not be wanting—'tis a wine
 Most like to blood. Some shall bleed fainter colours,

As sack and white wine. Some that have the itch
 (As there are tailors still in every army),
 Shall run with Rhenish that hath brimstone in't.
 When this is done, fight boldly : write yourself
 The tenth or 'leventh worthy—which you please :
 Your choice is free.

HAVE. I'll be the gaming worthy ;

My word shall be twice twelve. I think the dice
Ne'er mounted any upon horseback yet.

SLICER. We'll bring your friends and ours to this large dinner :

It works the better, eaten before witness.
Beware you say 'tis yours ; confession is
One step to weakness ; private conscience is
A theatre to valour. Let's be close :
Old Credulous and his son, and Master Caster,
Shall all be there.

HAVE. But then they will grow valiant
All at my charge.

SLICER. Ne'er fear't : the unknowing man
Eats only flesh, the understanding, valour :
His ignorance i' th' mystery keeps him coward.
To him 'tis but a meal ; to you 'tis virtue.
It shall be kept here.

HAVE. No fitter place. There is An old rich clutch-fist knight, Sir Thomas Bitefig,
Invite him too ; perhaps I may have luck,
And break his purse yet open for one hundred.
A usurer is somewhat exorable,
When he is full ; he ne'er lends money empty.

SLICER. Discreet, and wisely done : I was about
T' have prompted it.

HEAR. Stout Master Have-at-all,
Let's be sworn brothers.

HAVE. Pox ! thou fear'st I'll beat thee,
After I've eaten. Dost thou think I'll offer't ?
By my next meal, I wont ; nay, I do love
My friends howe'er. I do but think how I Shall bastinado o'er the ordinaries.
Arm'd with my sword, battoon and foot, I'll walk
To give each rank its due. No one shall 'scape,
But he I win of.

HEAR. You shall have at least
Some twenty warrants sign'd upon you straight :
The trunk-hose justices will try all means

To bind you to the peace, but that your strength
Shall not be bound by any.

SLICER. Surgeons will
Pray for your health and happiness : you may Bring them to be your tributaries, if
You but deny to fight awhile.

HAVE. My teeth
Are on an edge till I do eat. Now will
I cosen all men without opposition :
I feel my strength increase with very thought on't.
Sword, sword, thou shalt grow fat ; and thou, bat-toon,

Hold out, I prythee : when my labour's done,
I'll plant thee in the Tower-yard, and there,
Water'd with wine, thou shalt revive, and spring
In spite of nature with fresh succulent boughs,
Which shall supply the commonwealth with cudgels.
Thou I first meet after this meal I do
Pronounce unhappy shadow—happy yet
In that thou'lt fall by me. Some men I will Speak into carcase ; some I'll look to death ;
Others I'll breathe to dust : none shall hold back
This fatal arm. The Templars shall not dare
To attempt a rescue ; no mild words shall bury
My splitted, spitchcock'd—

SLICER. Oliv'd,¹ hash'd—

HEAR. Dri'd, powder'd—

HAVE. Roasted fury.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

MEANWELL, MOTH.

MEAN. If what I speak prove false, then stigmatise me.

¹ Oliv'd is a term of cookery. In Murrell's "New Book of Cookery," [1630,] is a receipt to make an olive-pie to be eaten hot. Olives are collops of any meat.—Steevens.

MOTH.¹ I was not what you mean ; depar dieu,²
You snyb³ mine old years, sans fail I wene⁴ you bin

A jangler⁵ and a goliardis.⁶

MEAN. I swear

By those two Janus' heads you had of us,
And your own too, as reverend as those,
There is one loves you that you think not on.

MOTH. Nad be, none pleasaunce is to me ylaft,⁷
This white top writeeth much my years, i-wis,
My fire yreken is in ashen cold.⁸
I can no whit of dalliance : if I kissen,

¹ Cartwright has fetched most of his antiquated terms from Chaucer. I have therefore given the explanation of them from Mr Tyrwhitt's excellent glossary on that author.

² [For God's sake.]

³ Snub, reprove.—T.

⁴ Think, suppose.—T.

⁵ A prater.—T.

⁶ Fr. Goliardus, or Goliardensis, Lat. "This jovial sect seems to have been so called from Gollas, the [representative] name of a man of wit, toward the end of the 12th century, [under which pass] "Apocalypsis Goliae" and other pieces, in burlesque Latin rhymes, some of which have been falsely attributed to Walter Mapes. In several authors of the 13th century, quoted by Du Cange, the Goliardi are classed with the joculatores or buffones."—T. [See "Poems of Walter Mapes," edit. Wright, p. ix. et seq.]

⁷ Left.—T.

⁸ So in Chaucer's "Reve's Prologue," v. 3880—

"Yet in our ashen cold is fire yreken."

—Stevens.

On this last line Mr Tyrwhitt observes: "There is so great a resemblance between this line and the following in "Gray's Elegy," [edit. Mitford, i. 106]—

"Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires," that I should certainly have considered the latter as an imitation, if Mr Gray himself had not referred us to the 169 (170) sonnet of Petrarch, as his original 'Ch'i veggio nel pensier,' &c.

These thick stark bristles of mine beard will pricken

Ylike the skin of hound-fish. Sikerly ¹

What wends against the grain is lytherly. ²

MEAN. Methinks y' are strong enough and very lusty,

Fit to get heirs : among your other pieces
Of age and time let one young face be seen
May call you father.

MOTH. Wholesome counsel ! But

The world is now full tickle ³ sykerly ;
'Tis hard to find a damosel unwenned ; ⁴
They being all coltish and full of ragery, ⁵
And full of gergon ⁶ as is a flecken ⁷ pie.

Whoso with them maketh that bond anon,
Which men do clyppen ⁸ spousail or wedlock,
Saint Idiot is his lord, i-wis.

MEAN. This is

No tender and wanton thing ; she is a staid
And settled widow, one who'll be a nurse
Unto you in your latter days.

MOTH. A norice ⁹

Some dele ystept in age ! So mote ¹⁰ I gone,
This goeth aright : how highteth ¹¹ she, say you ?

MEAN. Mistress Joan Potluck, vintner Potluck's widow.

MOTH. Joan Potluck, spinster ? Lore me o' thing mere

Alouten : what time 'gan she brendle thus ?

MEAN. On Thursday morning last.

MOTH. Y' blessed Thursday,

Ycleped so from Thor the Saxon's god.

¹ Surely.—T.

² Very ill.—T.

³ Uncertain.—T.

⁴ Unspotted.—T.

⁵ Wantonness.—T.

⁶ Jargon, chattering.—T.

⁷ Spotted.—T.

⁸ Call, name.—T.

⁹ A nurse.—T.

¹⁰ [Might.]

¹¹ Is she called.—T.

Ah, benedicite ! I might soothly sayn,
 Mine mouth hath itched all this livelong day ;
 All night me met ¹ eke, that I was at kirk ;
 My heart gan quapp ² full oft. Dan Cupido
 Sure sent thylke sweven ³ to mine head.

MEAN. You shall

Know more, if you'll walk in. [Exit MEANWELL.]

MOTH. Wend you beforne ;

Kembeth ⁴ thyself, and pyketh ⁵ now thyself ;
 Sleeketh thyself ; make cheer much digne, ⁶ good Robert :

I do arret thou shalt acquainted bin
 With nymphs and fauns, and hamadryades :
 And yeke the sisterne nine Pierides
 That were transmued into birds, nemp'd ⁷ pyes
 Metamorphoseos wot well what I mean :
 I is as jollie now as fish in Seine. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

HEARSAY, CASTER, SHAPE.

HEAR. Can I lie hid nowhere securely from
 The throng and press of men ? Must every place
 Become a theatre, where I seek shelter,
 And solitudes become markets, 'cause I'm there ?
 Good sir, I know your tricks ; you would entrap :
 This is your snare, not your request.

SHAPE. Take heed ;

He's nois'd about for a deep-searching head.
 I'll pawn my life 'tis a trick.

HEAR. Leave off these gins,

¹ Dreamed.—T.

² Tremble or quake.—T.

³ Dream.—T.

⁴ Combeth.—T.

⁵ Pick as a hawk does his feathers.—T.

⁶ Worthy.—T.

⁷ Named.—T.

You do not do it handsomely. You think
Y' have met with fools, I warrant.

SHAPE. On my life, a spy, a mere informer.

CAS. As I hope
For fortunes, my intentions are most fair.

SHAPE. A gamester's oath! he hath some reservation.

HEAR. Yet did I think you true——

CAS. By all that's good,
You do me wrong, to think that I'd wrong
you.

HEAR. When I lay agent last in New Atlantis,
I met with, what you now desire, a strange
New way of winning, but yet very sure.
Were not the danger great, I'd——

CAS. Do you think
I will betray myself or you, whom I Esteem above myself? I have as yet
One hundred left, some part of which——

SHAPE. Faith, sir,
These times require advice: if it should come Unto the council's ear once, he might be Sent into other kingdoms, to win up
Money for the relief o' th' state, and so
Be as it were an honest kind of exile.

CAS. If I do e'er discover, may I want
Money to pay my ordinary: may I
At my last stake (when there is nothing else To lose the game) throw ames-ace¹ thrice together!
I'll give you forty pound in hand——

HEAR. I may
Show you the virtue of't, though not the thing:
I love my country very well. Your high

¹ ["Both aces, the lowest throw upon the dice."—Dyce's
"Shakespeare Glossary," 1868.]

And low men are but trifles;¹ your pois'd dye,
That's ballasted with quicksilver or gold,
Is gross to this——

SHAPE. Proffer him more, I say. [Aside.]

CAS. Here's fifty——

HEAR. For the bristle dye, it is Not worth that hand that guides it: toys fit only
For clerks to win poor costermongers' ware with.

SHAPE. You do not come on well. [Aside.]

CAS. Here's threescore——

HEAR. Then

Your hollowed thumb join'd with your wriggled box——

The slur and suchlike are not to be talk'd of;
They're open to the eye. For cards, you may Without the help of any secret word
Or a false hand, without the cut or shuffle,
Or the pack'd trick, have what you will yourself;

There's none to contradict you.

CAS. If you please

But to instruct me, here is fourscore pound.

HEAR. Do you think 'tis money I esteem? I can

Command each term by art as much as will Furnish a navy. Had you but five pound
Left you in all the world, I'd undertake
Within one fortnight you should see five thousand.
Not that I covet any of your dross,
But that the power of this art may be More demonstrably evident, leave in My hands all but some smaller sum to set,
Something to stake at first.

¹ High men and low men are false dice. See Florio's "Dictionary," 1598, v. Pise. These terms so very oft occur in our ancient dramatic writers, that to quote examples would be endless.

SHAPE. He'll tell you all,
If you but seem to trust him. [Aside.]

CAS. Here I'll lay
Down in your hands all but this little portion,
Which I reserve for a foundation.

HEAR. Being y' are confident of me, and I Presume your lips are sealed up to silence,
Take that, which I did never yet discover :
So help you fortune, me philosophy.
(I must intreat your absence, Master Shape.)

[Exit SHAPE.]
I do presume you know the strength and power
That lies in fancy.

CAS. Strange things are done by it.

HEAR. It works upon that which is not as yet :
The little Ethiop infant would have been
Black in his cradle,¹ had he not been first

¹ The epithet black does not agree with Sir Kenelm Digby's "Discourse touching the Cure of Wounds by the Power of Sympathy," 4th edition, 1664, p. 104 : "I told her sundry stories upon this subject ; as that of the Queen of Ethiopia, who was delivered of a white boy ; which was attributed to a picture of the Blessed Virgin, which she had always near the tester of her bed, whereunto she bore great devotion. I urged another, of a woman who was brought to bed of a child all hairy, because of a portrait of St John the Baptist in the wilderness, where he wore a coat of camel's hair."

Perhaps the original reading is the true one, and the corruption lies in the former line. I would read—

"It works upon that which is not as yet :
The little Ethiop infant would have been
Black in his cradle, had he not been first White in the mother's strong imagination."

The compositor's eye might have caught had not from the following line—a very common accident. Without this emendation we have too much of not and had not in the course of three verses.—Steevens's note (altered.) [Cartwright and Digby probably derived the story of the Ethiop mother and her white offspring from a common source ; but Digby's work was not published till several years after Cartwright's death.]

White in the mother's strong imagination.
 'Tis thought the hairy child, that's shown about,
 Came by the mother's thinking on the picture
 Of Saint John Baptist in his camel's coat.
 See we not beasts conceive, as they do fancy
 The present colours plac'd before their eyes?
 We owe pied colts unto the varied horse-cloth,
 And the white partridge to the neighbouring snow.
 Fancy can save or kill: it hath clos'd up Wounds,¹ when the balsam could not; and without

The aid of salves, to think hath been a cure.
 For witchcraft then, that's all done by the force
 Of mere imagination. That which can Alter the course of nature, I presume,
 You'll grant shall bear more rule in petty hazards.

CAS. It must, it must, good sir. I pray, go on.

HEAR. Now the strongest fancies still are found to dwell

In the most simple; they being easiest won
 To the most firm belief, who understand not Why² 'tis they do believe. If they think 'twill
 Be so, it will be so: they do command
 And check the course of fortune: they may stop
 Thunder, and make it stand, as if arrested
 In its mid-journey. If that such a one Shall think you'll win, you must win: 'tis a due,
 That nature pays those men in recompense
 Of her deficiency that, whate'er they think,
 Shall come to pass. But now the hardest will be
 To find out one that's capable of thinking.

CAS. I know you can produce an instrument
 To work this your design by: let me owe you
 The whole and entire courtesy.

HEAR. I've one

¹ See Sir Kenelm Digby's "Discourse," p. 6.

² [Old copy, who. Mr Collier's correction.]

Committed to my custody but lately,
 The powerfull'st that way I e'er found yet :
 He will but think he shall he abus'd in such
 A company, and he's abus'd : he will
 Imagine only that he shall be cheated,
 And he is cheated : all still comes to pass.
 He's but one pin above a natural : but——

CAS. We'll purchase him ; I'll take up for't.
 Old Simon

Shall have my farm outright now. What's a piece
 Of dirty earth to me ? a clod ! a turf !

HEAR. Because I see your freer nature's such
 As doth deserve supplies, I'll do my best
 To win him o'er awhile into your service.

CAS. If I should strive to pay you thanks, I should

But undervalue this great courtesy.
 Sir, give me leave to think and worship. Stay :
 First, will I beggar all the gentlemen
 That do keep terms ; then build with what I win.
 Next, I'll undo all gaming citizens,
 And purchase upon that. The foreman shall Want of his wonted opportunities ;
 Old Thomas shall keep home, I warrant him.
 I will ascend to the groom-porters next,
 Fly higher games, and make my mincing knights
 Walk musing in their knotty freeze abroad ;
 For they shall have no home. There shall not be
 That pleasure but I'll balk : I'll run o'er Nature ;
 And when I've ransack'd her, I'll weary art :
 My means, I'm sure, will reach it. Let me see,
 'Twill yearly be——by heaven, I know not what——

HEAR. Ne'er think to sum it, 'tis impossible :
 You shall ne'er know what angels, pieces, pounds,
 Those names of want and beggary, mean : your tongue

Shall utter nought but millions ; you shall measure,
 Not count your moneys ; your revenues shall

Be proud and insolent, and unruly ;
They shall increase above your conquer'd spend-
ings,

In spite of their excess. Your care shall be
Only to tame your riches, and to make them
Grow sober and obedient to your use.

CAS. I'll send some forty thousand unto Paul's ;
Build a cathedral next in Banbury ;¹
Give organs to each parish in the kingdom ;
And so root out th' unmusical elect.
I'll pay all soldiers, whom their captains won't ;
Raise a new hospital for those maim'd people
That have been hurt in gaming : then build up
All colleges that ruin hath demolish'd,
Or interruption left unperfect.

HEAR. 'Twill
Never be done, I think, unless you do it.
Provide the wealthiest gamesters : there's but one
That can do us wrong—discovery.
You have no enemy but frailty.

CAS. Night
And silence are loud names compar'd with me.

HEAR. I see the tide of fortune rolling in Without resistance. Go, be close and happy.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

ANDREW, MEANWELL.

AND. Upon my conscience, now he cheated me ;
I could have never lost it else so strangely.

MEAN. What is a paltry cloak to a man of worth ?

¹ From Bishop Corbet's " Iter Boreale," this town appears to have been inhabited chiefly by Puritans. Mr Dodd, mentioned in act iv. sc. 3, was minister there.

It barr'd men only o' th' sight of your body ;
Your handsomeness will now appear the better.

AND. He was as like our Master Shape as could be ;

But that he had a patch upon his cheek
And a black beard, I should have sworn 'twere he :

It was somebody in his clothes, I'm sure.

MEAN. Some cunning cheater, upon my life, won

His cloak and suit too !

AND. There it is for certain,

Pyes take him ! doth he play for cloaks still ?
Surely

He hath a fly only to win good clothes.

Enter SHAPE.

SHAPE. The pox and plague take all ill-fortune !
this

The second time that he hath cheated me ;
My very best suit that I had !

AND. How now !

What, lost your cloak and suit ? A jest, I vow ;
I vow, a pretty jest. 'Odsnigs, I guess'd so ;
I saw him have it on : it made him look as like
you,

As like you—'tis a rogue, a mere decoy. [Aside.]

SHAPE. A rogue, a mere decoy ! and yet like
me ?

AND. Nay, hold, I mean he is a rogue, when
that

He hath his own clothes on. D' y' think that I
Would call him so when he is in your suit ?

SHAPE. No more of that, good Andrew, as you love me ;

Keep in your wit.

AND. Speak, tutor, do I use
To quarrel? Speak, good tutor.

MEAN. That wit, Andrew,
Of yours will be th' undoing of you, if
You use't no better.

AND. Faith, I thought I might Have broke a witty jest upon him, being
I've lost my cloak.

MEAN. True; but he has lost his too,
And then you know that is not lawful wit.

Enter HEARSAY.

HEAR. Here's Master Credulous and old Sir
Thomas;
They have some business with you.

MEAN. Bring 'em in.

SHAPE. My business lies not here, sirs, fare you well. [Exit SHAPE.]

AND. For God's sake, don't you tell old Sim on't, now.

SCENE V.

To them SIR THOMAS BITEFIG, CREDULOUS.

MEAN. God save you, good Sir Thomas.

SIR T. Save you, sir.

MEAN. Your welcome, Master Credulous.

CRE. Come hither:

Whither do you steal now? What! Where's your cloak?

AND. Going to foils e'en now, I put it off.

MEAN. To tell you truth, he hath lost it at doublets.

CRE. With what a lie you'd flap me in the mouth!

Thou hast the readiest invention

To put off anything : thou hadst it from
Thy mother, I'll be sworn : 't ne'er came from me.

MEAN. Peace, as you love yourself : if that the knight

Should once perceive that he were given to gaming,
'Twould make him break the match off presently.

CRE. Sir Thomas, here's my son ; he may be
yours,

If you please to accept him.

AND. Father, don't

Give me away for this : try me once more.

SIR T. I like his person well enough, if that You'll make him an estate convenient.

MEAN. He hath more in him, sir, than he can show.
He hath one fault : he's something covetous.

SIR T. Marry, a very commendable fault.

CRE. He is descended of no great high blood :
He hath a house, although he came of none.

His grandfather was a good livery-man,
Paid scot and lot, old Timothy Credulous

My father—though I say it, that should not.

SIR T. I don't regard this thing that you call blood ;

'Tis a mere name, a sound.

MEAN. Your worship speaks
Just like yourself : methinks he's noble
That's truly rich. Men may talk much of lines,
Of arms, of blood, of race, of pedigree :
Houses, descents and families ; they are
But empty noise, God knows ; the idle-breath
Of that puff nothing, honour ; formal words,
Fit for the tongues of men that ne'er knew yet
What stem, what gentry, nay, what virtue lies
In great revenues.

SIR T. Well and pithy said !

You may work on my daughter, and prevail
For that young stripling. 'Tis a foolish wench,
An unexperienc'd girl ; she'd like to have been

Caught by Sir Robert Littleworth's son, if that I had not banish'd him my house ; a youth
Honest enough, I think, but that he's poor ;
Born to more name than fortune.

CRE. He is safe

For ever wooing. I have laid his father
Out of harm's way ; there's picking meat for him,
And God knows where he's gone : he hath not been Seen this long while ; he's, sure, turn'd vagabond ;
No sight of him since the arrest of his father.
Andrew, address yourself to good Sir Thomas.

AND. 'Slid, father, you're the strangest man—I won't.

CRE. As God shall mend me, thou'rt the proudest thing——

Thou can'st not compliment, but in caparisons.

AND. What's that to you ? I'd fain say something
yet,

But that I can't, my losses do so vex me.

CRE. Come, think not on't, my boy ; I'll furnish thee.

AND. Sir, though——

CRE. Nay, to't, I say : help him, sir, help him.

AND. Sir, though without my cloak at this time——

To-morrow I shall have one—give me leave

Barely to say I am your servant, sir——

In hose and doublet.

CRE. I'll do what you told me.

HEAR. Take heed : if that you do't, he'll guess you're given

To idle spendings, and so cross the match.

I will invite him as to myself.

CRE. Do so.

HEAR. Sir Thomas, if you'll please so far to grace us,

As be a guest to-morrow here, we shall Study hereafter to deserve the favour.

SIR T. Although I do not use to eat at ordinaries ;
Yet to accept your courtesy, good friends,
I'll break my wonted custom.

HEAR. You shall have it
With a free heart.

SIR T. If I thought otherwise,
I do assure you, I'd not venture hither. [Exeunt.]

ACT III., SCENE 1.

MOTH. Harrow,¹ alas ! I swelt² here as I go ;
Brenning³ in fire of little Cupido.
I no where hoart yfeel but on mine head.
Huh, huh, huh, so ; ycapred very wele.
I am thine leek, thou Chaucer eloquent ;
Mine head is white, but, O, mine taile is green.
This is the palyes, where mine lady wendeth.

*Saint Francis⁴ and Saint Benedight,
Blesse this house from wicked wight ;
From the night-mare and the goblin,
That is hight Good-fellow Robin ;
Keep it from all evil spirits,
Fairies, weazels, rats, and ferrets :
From curfew-time
To the next prime.*

¹ [See Halliwell's Dictionary, v. Haro—the same word, and Littré's French Dictionary. A case occurred a few years ago, in which the ancient Clameur de Haro was raised at Jersey, in the Presbyterian Church there. But the word is here employed as a mere ejaculation or exclamation, and, it must be added, without much propriety.]

² Faint.—T.

³ Burning.—T.

⁴ See notes to "Midsummer Night's Dream," act ii. sc. 1. [and "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain," 1870, iii. 39 et seq.]

Come forth, mine duck, mine bride, mine honeycomb ;
Come forth, mine cinnamon.

Enter MISTRESS POTLUCK.

POT. Who is't that calls ?

MOTH. A knight most gent.

POT. What is your pleasure, sir ?

MOTH. Thou art mine pleasure, by dame Venus brent ;

So fresh thou art, and therewith so lycand.¹

POT. Alas ! I am not any flickering thing :
I cannot boast of that slight-fading gift
You men call beauty ; all my handsomeness
Is my good-breeding and my honesty.
I could plant red where you now yellow see ;
But painting shows an harlot.

MOTH. Harlot ! so

Called from one Harlotha, concubine
To deignous² Wilhelm, hight the Conqueror.

POT. Were he ten Williams and ten conquerors,
I'd have him know't, I scorn to be his harlot.
I never yet did take press-money to Serve under any one.

MOTH. Then take it now.

Werme kiss ! Thine lips ytaste like marrow-milk ;
Me-thinketh that fresh butter runneth on them.
I grant well now, I do endure woe,
As sharp as doth the Tityus in hell,
Whose stomach fowls do tyren³ ever more,
That highten vultures, as do tellen clerks.

POT. You've spoke my meaning, though I do not know
What 'tis you said. Now see the fortune on't ;

¹ Agreeable, pleasing.

² Disdainful.—T.

³ [Tear.]

We do know one another's souls already ;
The other must needs follow. Where's your dwelling ?

MOTH. Yclose by Aldersgate there dwelleth one Wights clepen Robert Moth ; now Aldersgate ¹
Is hoten so from one that Aldrich hight ;
Or else of elders, that is, ancient men ;
Or else of aldern-trees, which growden there ;
Or else, as heralds say, from Aluredus :
But whencesoe'er this yate ² ycalled is,
There dwelleth Robert Moth, thine paramour.

POT. Can you be constant unto me, as I
Can be to you ?

MOTH. By Woden, god of Saxons,
From whence comes We'nsday, that is, Woden'sday,
Truth is a thing that ever I will keep,
Unto thylke day in which I creep into
My sepulchre ; I'll be as faithful to thee,
As Chaunticleer to Madam Partelot. ³

POT. Here then I give away my heart to you ;
As true a heart as ever widow gave.

MOTH. I Robert Moth, this tenth [year] of our king, ⁴
Give to thee, Joan Potluck, my bigg'st crampring : ⁵

¹ See Stowe's "Survey of London," Strype's edition, 1720, vol. I. bk. ii. p. 18.

² Gate.

³ The name of Chaucer's cock and hen.—Stevens.

⁴ So that this play was written in 1634.—Pegge.

⁵ These rings were sometimes made out of the handles of decayed coffins, and in more ancient times were consecrated at the ceremony of creeping [to] the cross, of which an account is given in a note on the "Merry Devil of Edmonton," with reference to the observations of Dr Percy on the "Northumberland Household Book," 1512.—Stevens.

Cramp-rings were formerly worn as charms for curing of the cramp. See Brookes's "Natural History," vol. i. p. 206.—Pegge.

Andrew Borde, in his "Book of the Introduction of Know-

And with it my carcase entire I bequeathen
 Under my foot to hell, above my head to heaven ;
 And to wnesse¹ that this is sooth,
 I bite thy red lip with my tooth.

POT. Though for a while our bodies now must part,
 I hope they will be join'd hereafter.

MOTH. O!

ledge," 1542, says: "The kynges of Englande . . . doth halowe every yere crampe rynges, the which rynges worne on ones fynger doth helpe them the whyche hath the crampe." Dr Percy, in his notes on the "Northumberland Household Book," speaking of these rings observes "that our ancient kings even in those dark times of superstition, do not seem to have affected to cure the king's evil; at least in the MSS. above quoted there is no mention or hint of any power of that sort. This miraculous gift was left to be claimed by the Stuarts: our ancient Plantagenets were humbly content to cure the cramp." I cite this passage merely to remark that the learned editor of the above curious volume has been betrayed into a mistake by the manner in which the cramp rings are mentioned in Mr Anstis's MSS. The power of curing the king's evil was certainly claimed by many of the Plantagenets. The above Dr Borde, who wrote in the time of Henry VIII., says, "The kynges of England, by the power that God hath given to them, doth make sicke men whole of a sickness called the Kynges Evyll." In Laneham's "Account of the Entertainment of Kennilworth Castle," it is said, "And also by her highness accustomed mercy and charitee, nyne cured of the paynful and dangerous diseaz called the King's Evil, for that kings and queens of this realm without oother medsin (save only by handling and prayer) only doo cure it." Polydore Virgil asserts the same, and William Tooker, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, [1597,] published a book on this subject. For the knowledge of this last book I am obliged to Dr Douglas's excellent treatise, called "The Criterion," p. 191, &c.

¹ Alluding to the old way of biting the wax, usually red, in sealing deeds.—Pegge.

The form usually was this—

" And to witness this is sooth,
 I bite the wax with my wang tooth."

See Cowell's "Interpreter," 1607.

And must we part? Alas! and must we so?
Sin it may be no bet,¹ now gang in peace.

[Exit POTLUCK.]

Though soft into my bed I gin to sink
To sleep long as I'm wont to done,² yet all
Will be for nought; I may well lig and wink,
But sleep shall there none in this heart ysink.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.

CREDULOUS, and SHAPE dogging him.

CRE. So now the mortgage is mine own outright;

I swear by the faith of my body now,
It is a pretty thing—o' my corporal oath,
A very pretty thing. Besides the house,
Orchards, and gardens, some two hundred acres
Of land, that beareth as good country corn,
For country corn, as may be.

SHAPE. As I'd have it.

CRE. How now, good friend? Where dost thou live?

Dost thou know Caster's farm?

SHAPE. Yes, sir; I fear 'tis gone:
Sure, Caster's farm is cast away!

CRE. A jest!

Good troth, a good one of a country one;
I see there's wit there too. Then thou dost know it?

SHAPE. I am afraid I shall not know it long;
I shall lose my acquaintance.

CRE. 'Snigs, another!

A very perilous head! a dangerous brain!

¹ Better.—T.

² Do.—T.

SHAPE. God bless my master, and the devil take Somebody else.

CRE. Um! that's not quite so good
As th' other two; that somebody else is me:
Now you shall see how he'll abuse me here
To mine own face. [Aside.] Why somebody else,
good brother?

SHAPE. The rich gout rot his bones! An hungry, old,
Hard-gripping citizen, that only feeds
On heirs' and orphans' goods, they say must have
it:

One that ne'er had the wisdom to be honest,
And's therefore knave, 'cause 'tis the easier art.
I know he hath not given half the worth on't:
'Tis a mere cheat.

CRE. 'Slid, brother, thou hast paid him
To th' utmost, though he hath not paid thy master.

Now is my wit up too. This land, I see,
Will make men thrive i' th' brain. [Aside.]

SHAPE. Would he were here,
Whoe'er he be, I'd give him somewhat more
Into the bargain: a base, thin-jaw'd sneaksbill,
Thus to work gallants out of all! It grieves me,
That my poor tenement too goes into th' sale.

CRE. What have I done? Now, wit, deliver
me!

If he know I am he, he'll cut my throat;
I never shall enjoy it. [Aside.] Sure, it was
Your master's seeking, friend; he would ne'er else
Have had to do with it: he that bought it is
A very honest man, and if you please him,
Will deal with you. I may speak a word
In your behalf; 'twon't be the worse for you.

SHAPE. I'm going, sir, unto him; do you know
Where I may find him?

CRE. What if I am he?

SHAPE. I am afraid he is not half so honest
As you do seem.

CRE. Faith, I'm the same. I tried
What metal thou wast made of: I perceive Thou wilt not flinch for th' wetting;¹ thou may'st
be

My bailiff there, perhaps.

SHAPE. An't please your worship! [Aside.]

CRE. So now the case is alter'd.

SHAPE. I do know

It was my master's seeking; you would ne'er
Have had to do with't else. He sent me to you
For the last hundred pound by the same token
That you invited him to th' eating-house.

CRE. O, this simplicity! He does not know
Yet what an ordinary means. [Aside.] I was now coming

To have paid it in.

SHAPE. I'll save your worship that Labour, an't please you. Let me now begin
My bailiffship.

CRE. 'Snigs, wiser yet than so.
Where is thy master?

SHAPE. Sir, my master's here,
I thank my stars; but Master Caster is
At an horse-race some ten miles off.

CRE. Why, then,
I'll stay till he returns: 'twill be by dinner.

SHAPE. Your best way's now to send it: if by chance

The race go on his side, your worship may Fail of your purchase.

CRE. 'Snigs, and that's considerable.
Here, here, make haste with it; but, ere thou goest,
Tell me, is it a pretty thing?

¹ An allusion to the effects of water on cloth ill-woven.

SHAPE. O' my corporal oath,
A very pretty thing. Besides the house,
Orchards, and gardens, some two hundred acres
Of land that beareth as good country corn—
God give you luck on't!

CRE. Right, as I did say,
Ev'n word by word. But prythee, stay a little ;
What meadow-ground's there ? Pasture in proportion ?

SHAPE. As you would wish, sir, I'm in haste.

CRE. Nay, bailiff,
But one word more, and I have done : what place
Is there to dry wet linen in ?

SHAPE. O, twenty,
To hang up clothes or anything you please ;
Your worship cannot want line-room. God be wi'
you !

CRE. But this once, and——

SHAPE. I must be gone——The race !

[Exit SHAPE.]

CRE. Little think'st thee, how diligent thou art
To little purpose. 'Snigs, I pity him :
What haste he makes to cheat himself, poor fool !
Now I am safe, the wretch must pardon me
For his poor tenement ; all's mine. I'll sow
One ground or other every month with pease ;
And so I will have green ones all the year.
These yeomen have no policy i' th' world. [Exit.]

SCENE III.

PRISCILLA, MEANWELL.

PRIS. Pray y', entertain yourself awhile, until
I give my mistress notice of your presence.
I'd leave a book with you, but that I see
You are a gentleman : perhaps you'll find
Some pretty stories in the hangings there.

MEAN. Thank you, sweetheart.

PRIS. A very proper man ! [Aside.]
 It'll lie in me to do you any pleasure,
 Pray you, sir, use me ; you shall find me ready.

[Exit PRISCILLA.]

MEAN. I make no doubt of that. These implements,
 These chamber-properties are such ripe things, They'll fall with the least touch : from twelve to twenty
 They think that others are to sue to them ;
 When once they've pass'd these limits, they make bold—
 I cannot say to woo, that's something modest—
 But ask downright themselves.

Enter MISTRESS JANE.

JANE. Leave us, Priscilla,
 And wait without awhile.

MEAN. Fair mistress, pardon
 The boldness of a stranger, who uncivilly
 Thus interrupts your better thoughts.

JANE. May I
 Demand your business ?

MEAN. Under favour thus :
 Not to use farther circumstance, fair virgin
 (And yet less fair, 'cause virgin), you are one
 That are the thought, the care, the aim, the strife—
 I should not err, if I should say the madness—
 Of all young men : all sighs, all folded arms,
 All o'ercastr looks, all broken sleeps are ow'd
 Only to you.

JANE. I'm sorry I should be
 A trouble unto any : if I could Afford the remedy as well as now
 I do your grief, assure yourself that cure
 Shall be the birth of my next action.

MEAN. That cure is my request. If that this were
 Mine own suit, I had us'd no circumstance.
 Young Master Credulous, a proper man—
 For sure he shall be rich—one whom the whole
 List of our city virgins doat on—you
 Conceive the rest, I know.

JANE. Alas! what ails him?
 I'll not be slack to do him any good.

MEAN. 'Tis in your power. He is very much,
 If you will know't—but, sure, you will not grant
 If I should tell you.

JANE. If you thus presume
 That I am hard, you only ask denial;
 Your expectation's cross'd, except you fail.

MEAN. If you will know it, then, he is in love.

JANE. I pity him indeed, poor heart. With whom?

MEAN. Even with your beauteous self.

JANE. 'Tis not well done
 To scoff one ne'er did injure you.

MEAN. I vow
 By all that's good, by your fair self, I am
 As tender of you as that bless'd one is,
 Whoe'er he be, that loves you most. If I
 In any case abuse you, let me be
 More miserable than Littleworth.

JANE. Is he become expression?¹ Is his fate
 The period of ill-wishes? Sure, he never Deserv'd so ill from you!

MEAN. I don't reflect
 Upon his ruin'd fortunes, but your coldness;
 And, sure, I may call him unhappy whom
 You do neglect.

JANE. That man, where'er he be,

¹ [A proverb, or bye-word.]

Is happier than yourself ; and were he here,
You should see him receiv'd, and yourself scorn'd.

MEAN. I do not think so, lady ; sure, you would Make more of me than so. I'll bring the man,
And so confute you.

JANE. It may be I might
Love you the better something for that office,
If he might enter here.

MEAN. Nay, I could tell
Y' had cast him off : alas ! you need not hide it :
I have it from himself.

JANE. Doth he think so ? Could I but see
him——

MEAN. If his sight can bring
But the least joy unto you—as perhaps You'll take some pleasure in his misery—
You shall enjoy it.

JANE. I do fear you promise
Only to raise my hopes awhile, and then
To triumph in their ruin.

MEAN. That you may
See how my breast and tongue agree, I'll leave
This ring with you, till I return again.

JANE. My Littleworth ! Fool that I was,
could I
Not all this while perceive 'twas thee ? Why didst thou

Defer my joy thus long by suffering me
To stand i' th' cloud ?

MEAN. Alas ! I guess'd I'd been Infectious to thee now ; that thou wouldst look
On a disease more mildly than on me ;
For poverty is counted a contagion.

JANE. I call this kiss to witness—which I wish,
If I prove false, may be the last to me
Which friends pay dying friends—I ne'er will be Other's than thine.

MEAN. I like the vow so well,

That the same way I'll seal my promise too.
 If I prove not as thou (that is, most constant),
 May this kiss be—that I may wish it worse,
 Than that which is due to departing souls—
 The last that I shall take from thee. I am
 Sent here, but yet unknown to them that send me,
 To be another's spokesman : the man is
 That foolish son of Master Credulous.
 Thou must pretend some liking. 'Twas thy father
 Granted me this access to win thee for him :
 Be thou no way averse ; 't shall be my care
 So to bring things about that thou shalt be Mine by consent in spite of misery.

JANE. Be secret, and love prosper thy design !

[Exit JANE.

MEAN. Happy that man that meets such faithfulness !

I did not think it had been in the sex.

I know not now what's misery. Peace ! my fair

[Music.

Is hallowing the lute with her bless'd touch.

A Song within.

1. *Come, O, come, I brook no stay ;
 He doth not love that can delay.
 See how the stealing night
 Hath blotted out the light,
 And tapers do supply the day.*

2. *To be chaste is to be old ;
 And that foolish girl that's cold
 Is fourscore at fifteen :
 Desires do write us green,
 And looser flames our youth unfold.*

MEAN. 'T cannot be her, her voice was ne'er profan'd
 With such inmodest numbers.

3. *See, the first taper's almost gone ;
Thy flame like that will straight be none,
And I as it expire,
Not able to hold fire :
She loseth time that lies alone.*

MEAN. 'Tis the breath
Of something troubled with virginity.

4. *O, let us cherish then these powers,
Whiles we yet may call them ours :
Then we best spend our time,
When no dull zealous chime,
But sprightful kisses strike the hours.*

Enter PRISCILLA.

MEAN. What dost thou mean ?

PRIS. Only to please you, sir.

MEAN. Sweetest of things, was't thou ? I' faith,
I guess'd

'T could be no other's melody but yours.
There have been many of your sex much given
Unto this kind of music.

PRIS. Sappho was Excellent at it ; but Amphion he—
He was the man that outdid all : 'tis said
Of him that he could draw stones with the sound
Of his sweet strings. I'd willingly arrive
At some perfection in the quality.

MEAN. I do acknowledge your desires most prone.
This for your trouble.

PRIS. I am not mercenary ;
Your acceptation is reward enough.

MEAN. You have it, then.

PRIS. Beauty go with you, sir.

[Exeunt several ways.]

SCENE IV.

CREDULOUS, HEARSAY, SLICER; to them SIR THOMAS BITEFIG, HAVE-AT-ALL, CASTER, as to the Ordinary.

CRE. You're welcome, friends, as I may say——

HEAR. You do forget——

CRE. That am a guest as well as you.

SLICER. Most noble sons of fortune and of valour,

You grace us with your presence: you must pardon

Our small provision.

HEAR. No variety here,

But you, most noble guests, whose gracious looks
Must make a dish or two become a feast.

HAVE. I'll be as free as 'twere mine own.

CAS. Who thinks

On anything that borders upon sadness,
May he ne'er know what's mirth, but when others
Laugh at his sullen wrinkles.

HAVE. We will raise

A noise enough to wake an alderman,
Or a cast captain when the reck'ning is About to pay.

CRE. Hang thinking; 'snigs, I'll be
As merry as a pismire. Come, let's in.

SLICER. Let's march in order military, sirs.

HAVE. That's well remember'd, most complete lieutenant. [Exeunt as to the Ordinary.]

SCENE V.

RHYMEWELL, BAGSHOT, VICAR CATCHMEY, SIR CHRISTOPHER.

RHYME. Come, my most noble order of the club,
'Cause none will else, let's make much of ourselves :

His letter may procure a dinner yet.

BAG. Cheer up, Sir Kit, thou look'st too spiritually :

I see too much of the tithepig in thee.

CHRIS. I'm not so happy : Kit's as hungry
now

As a besieged city, and as dry

As a Dutch commentator. This vile world
Ne'er thinks of qualities : good truth, I think
'T hath much to answer for. Thy poetry,
Rhymewell, and thy voice, Vicar Catchmey, and Thy law too, Bagshot, is contemn'd : 'tis pity Professions should be slighted thus. The day
Will come perhaps, when that the commonwealth
May need such men as we. There was a time When cobblers were made churchmen ; and those black'd

Smutch'd creatures thrust into white surplices,
Look'd like so many magpies, and did speak
Just as they [did], by rote. But now the land
Surfeits forsooth : poor labourers in divinity
Can't earn their groat a day, unless it be Reading of the Christian burial for the dead ;
When they, ev'n for that reason, truly thank God for thus taking this their brother to him.

CATCH. Something profane, Sir Christopher !

CHRIS. - When I

Level my larger thoughts unto the basis
Of thy deep shallowness, am I profane ?

Henceforth I'll speak, or rather not speak, for
I will speak darkly.

CATCH. There's one comfort then :
You will be brief !

CHRIS. My briefness is prolix.
Thy mind is bodily, thy soul corporeal,
And all thy subtle faculties are not subtle :
Thy subtlety is dulness. I am strong ;
I will not be conceiv'd by such mechanics.

RHYME. I do conceive you, though, Sir Christopher ;
My muse doth sometimes take the selfsame flight.

CHRIS. Pauci, pauci quos æquus amat.
But quadragesimal wits¹ and fancies, lean
As ember weeks (which therefore I call lean, Because they're fat), these I do doom unto
A knowing ignorance : he that's conceiv'd
By such is not conceiv'd ; sense is non-sense,
If understood by them. I'm strong again.

RHYME. You err most orthodoxly, sweet Sir Kit.

CHRIS. I love that, though I hate it ; and I have
A kind of disagreeing consent to't.
I'm strong, I'm strong again. Let's keep these two

In desperate hope of understanding us :
Riddles and clouds are very lights of speech.
I'll veil my careless anxious thoughts, as 'twere
In a perspicuous cloud, that I may
Whisper in a loud voice, and ev'n be silent,
When I do utter words. Words did I call them ?
My words shall be no words, my voice no voice,
My noise no noise, my very language silence.
I'm strong, I'm strong. Good sir, you understand
not !

¹ i.e., Those who write the customary verses during the Lent season at Oxford. —Stevens.

BAG. Nor do desire : 'tis merely froth and barm,
The yeast that makes your thin small sermons work.

CHRIS. Thou hold'st thy peace most vocally.
Again!

CATCH. I hate this bilk.

CHRIS. Thou lov'st, 'cause thou dost hate :
Thy injuries are courtesies. Strong again!

CATCH. Good Samson, use not this your ass's jaw-bone.

CHRIS. Thou'st got my love by losing it : that earnest

Jest hath regain'd my soul. Samson was strong ;
He killed a thousand with an ass's jaw-bone,

Enter a SERVANT, as passing by.

And so will I. 'St ! 'st !—good friend, d' y' hear ?
Here is a letter, friend, to Master Meanwell.

BAG. Any reversions yet ? Nothing transmiss'd ?

RHYME. No gleanings, James ? No trencheranalects ?¹

SER. Parley a little with your stomachs, sirs.

CATCH. There's nothing so ridiculous as the hungry :

A fasting man is a good jest at any time.

SER. There is a gentleman without, that will'd
me

To ask if you'll admit of him among you :

He can't endure to be in good company.

CATCH. You're merry, James. Yes, by all means, good James.

Admit, quoth he ! What else ? Pray, send him
in. [Exit SERVANT.]

Let's be resolv'd to fall out now ; then he ¹ i. e., Scraps of anything ; ἀναλέγω, colligo. Every one has heard of the collectanea and analecta poetarum.—Stevens.

Shall have the glory to compose the quarrel
By a good dozen of pacifical beer,

RHYME. BAG. Agreed, agreed.

CHRIS. My coat allows no quarrel.

RHYME. The colour bears't, if you'll venture the stuff.

The tenderness of it, I do confess,
Somewhat denies a grappling.

CHRIS. I will try :

Perhaps my spirit will suggest some anger.

Enter ANDREW.

AND. Save you, boon sparks ! Will't please you to admit me ?

CHRIS. Your worship graceth us in condescend-
ing

To level thus your presence, noble¹ sir.

AND. What may I call your name, most reverend
sir ?

BAG. His name's Sir Kit.

CHRIS. My name is not so short :

'Tis a trisyllable, an't please your worship ;
But vulgar tongues have made bold to profane it
With the short sound of that unhallow'd idol
They call a kit. Boy, learn more reverence.

BAG. Yes, to my betters.

AND. Nay, friends, do not quarrel.

CHRIS. It is the holy cause, and I must quarrel.
Thou son of parchment, got between the standish
And the stiff buckram-bag ! thou, that may'st call
The pen thy father and the ink thy mother,
The sand thy brother and the wax thy sister,

¹ [The reading of the old copy is humble, which does not appear to agree at all with the context, since the parson addresses Andrew in a half-satirical strain of respect.]

And the good pillory thy cousin [once] remov'd—
I say, learn reverence to thy betters.

BAG. Set up an hour-glass; he'll go on, until
The last sand make his period.

CHRIS. 'Tis my custom;
I do approve the calumny: the words
I do acknowledge, but not the disgrace,
Thou vile ingrosser of unchristian deeds.

BAG. Good Israel Inspiration, hold your tongue;
It makes far better music when you nose
Sternhold's or Wisdom's metre.¹

CATCH. By your leave,
You fall on me now, brother.

RHYME. 'Tis by cause
You are too forward, brother Catchmey.

CATCH. I too forward!

RHYME. Yes, I say you are too forward—
By the length of your London-measure beard.

CATCH. Thou never couldst entreat that respite
yet
Of thy dishonesty as to get one hair
To testify thy age.

BAG. I'm beardless too;
I hope you think not so of me?

¹ Robert Wisdom, a translator of the Psalms. Wood ("Athenæ Oxonienses," vol. i., "Fasti," p. 57) says he was "a good Latin and English poet of his time, and one that had been in exile in Queen Mary's reign. He was also rector of Settrington in Yorkshire, and died in 1568, having been nominated to a bishopric in Ireland in the time of Edward the 6th." His version of the Psalms is ridiculed in the "Remains of Samuel Butler," 1759, p. 41—

"Thence, with short meal and tedious grace,
In a loud tone and public place,
Sings Wisdom's Hymns, that trot and pace
As if Goliath scann'd 'em."

Again, p. 230: "Besides, when Rouse stood forth for his trial, Robin Wisdom was found the better poet." [Further particulars of Wisdom are to be found in Warton's Poetry, by Hazlitt, iv. 181.]

² [Old copy, my.]

CHRIS. Yes, verily ;
Not one hair's difference betwixt you both.

RHYME. Thou violent cushion-thumper, hold thy tongue ;
The Furies dwell in it !

CATCH. Peace, good Sir Kit.

CHRIS. Sir Kit again ! thou art a Lopez. When
One of thy legs rots off (which will be shortly),
Thou'lt bear about a quire of wicked paper,
Defiled with [un]sanctified rhymes
And idols in the frontispiece—that I May speak to thy capacity, thou'lt be
A ballad-monger.

CATCH. I shall live to see thee
Stand in a playhouse door with thy long box,
Thy half-crown library, and cry small books.
*Buy a good godly sermon, gentlemen—
A judgment shown upon a knot of drunkards :
A pill to purge out popery : The life
And death of Katharine Stubbs.*¹

CHRIS. Thou wilt visit windows.
Methinks I hear thee with thy begging tone,

¹ [Of these books the two former are not at present known by such titles. The third, the "Life of Mistress Katherine Stubbs," by her husband, the celebrated Philip Stubbs, was originally published in 1591, and went through many editions.] The author observes, in the opening of the tract: "At fifteen years of age, her father being dead, her mother bestowed her in marriage upon one Master Philip Stubbes, with whom she lived four years and almost a half, very honestly and godly."

Richard Brome, in his play of "The Antipodes," act iii. sc. 2, mentions one of them in the following manner—

"A booke of the godly life and death
Of Mistress Katherine Stubbs, which I have turn'd
Into sweet meetre, for the vertuous youth,
To woe an ancient lady widow with."

Again, Bishop Corbet in his "Iter Boreale," says—

"And in some barn hear cited many an author, Kate Stubbs, Anne Ascue, or the Ladies Daughter."

About the break of day, waking the brethren
Out of their morning-revelations.

AND. Brave sport, i' faith !

RHYME. Pray y', good sir, reconcile them.
If that same Justice be i' th' ordinary now,
He'll bind them to the peace for troubling him.

BAG. Why should he not, good sir? It is his office.

AND. Now 'tis o' this side : O, for a pair of cudgels !

RHYME. Peace, inkhorn ; there's no music in thy tongue.

CATCH. Thou and thy rhyme lie both : the tongue of man
Is born to music naturally.

RHYME. Thou thing,
Thy belly looks like to some strutting hill,
O'ershadow'd with thy rough beard like a wood.

CHRIS. Or like a larger jug, that some men call
A Bellarmine, but we a Conscience ;
Whereon the lewder hand of pagan workman
Over the proud ambitious head hath carv'd
An idol large with beard episcopal,
Making the vessel look like tyrant Eglon.

CATCH. Profane again, Sir Christopher, I take
it.

CHRIS. Must I be strong again? Thou human beast,
Who'rt only eloquent when thou say'st nothing,
And appear'st handsome while thou hid'st thyself,
I'm holy, 'cause profane.

AND. Courageous rascals !
Brave spirits ! soldiers in their days, I warrant !

BAG. Born in the field, I do assure your worship.
This quarrelling is meat and drink to them.

RHYME. Thou liest.

BAG. Nay, then I do defy thee thus.

[BAGSHOT draws his inkhorn, and RHYMEWELL catcheth off SIR CHRISTOPHER'S hat and spectacles.

RHYME. And thus I am prepar'd to answer thee.

CHRIS. For the good saint's sake, part them :
I am blind,

If that my spectacles should once miscarry.

RHYME. Caitiff, this holy instrument shall quail
thee.

BAG. And this shall send thee to thy cousin furies.

CHRIS. I feel a film come o'er mine eyes already :
I must look out an animal conductive—
I mean a dog.

AND. Pray y', beat not out his eyes in Another's hands.

CHRIS. Most strongly urg'd !

CATCH. Your words
Are merely wind. James, ho ! what, James, some beer.

They're mastiff dogs ; they wont be parted, sir,
Without good store of liquor.

Enter SERVANT, with beer.

AND. I will souse them.

SER. Drink to 'em, sir, if that you'll have 'em quiet.

AND. Is that the way ? Here's to you, my friends, a whole one.

BAG. Were't not for that good gentleman, thou'dst smoke for't.

RHYME. Had I not vow'd some reverence to his presence,
Thou hadst been nothing.

BAG. 'Fore Mars, I was dry:
This valour's thirsty : fill to my antagonist.

RHYME. No, mine own dish will serve ; I'm singular.

Few vessels still do well . I carry this
To drink my beer, while others drink their sack.
I am abstemious Rhymewell : I hate wine,
Since I spake treason last i' th' cellar. Here,
Give me thy hand, thou child of fervency.
Didst thou mistrust thy spectacles ?

It was no anger, 'twas a rapture merely.

CHRIS. Drink, and excuse it after. James, your help !

Come, man of voice, keep time, while that I drink.
This moisture shall dry up all injuries,
Which I'll remember only to forget ;
And so hereafter, which I'm wont to call
The future now, I love thee stubbornly.
Your beer is like my words, strong, stinging gear.

CATCH. Here, little lawyer, let's be friends hereafter ;

I love this reconcilment with my heart.

AND. 'Tis the best deed that e'er I did. O' my conscience,

I shall make a good justice of the peace.

There had been blood shed if I had not stickled.¹

SER. More blood been spill'd, I warrant, than beer now.

AND. That inkhorn is a deadly dangerous weapon :

It hath undone one quarter of the kingdom.

CHRIS. Men should forgive ; but thou art far, yea far

¹ i.e., Been the mediator. The stickler now is called the sidesman. So in "Troilus and Cressida," act v. sc. 8—

"And, stickler-like, our armies separates."

—Steevens.

From it, O Bagshot : thou'rt in love with hate.
 Bless me ! I see the fiend still in his looks ;
 He is not reconcilable with drink :
 He'll ne'er love truly till he eat with me.
 The nature of his spirit asketh meat ;
 He hath a wolf in's breast : food must appease him.

AND. Cold meat will do it, will't not ?

RHYME. Anything
 That may employ the teeth.

AND. Go, James, provide.

You are not merry yet.

CATCH. To satisfy you
 In that point, we'll sing a song of his.

AND. Let's ha't ; I love these ballads hugely.

The Song.

1. CATCHMEY.

*Then our music is in prime,
 When our teeth keep triple time ;
 Hungry notes are fit for knells.
 May lankness be
 No guest to me :
 The bagpipe sounds when that it swells.*

CHORUS. May lankness, &c.

2. BAGSHOT.

*A mooting-night¹ brings wholesome smiles,
 When John-a-Nokes and John-a-Styles
 Do grease the lawyer's satin.*

¹ "Moot is a term used in the Inns-of-Court, and signifies the handling or arguing a case for exercise."—Blount.

For the regulations of Mooting and Reading-Days, see Dugdale's "Origines Juridicales."

*A reading-day
Frights French away,
The benchers dare speak Latin.*
CHORUS. A reading, &c.

3. RHYMEWELL.

*He that's full doth verse compose ;
Hunger deals in sullen prose :
Take notice and discard her.
The empty spit
Ne'er cherish'd wit ;
Minerva loves the larder.*
CHORUS. The empty spit, &c.

4. CHRISTOPHER.

*First to breakfast, then to dine,
Is to conquer Bellarmine :
Distinctions then are budding.
Old Sutcliff's wit¹
Did never hit,
But after his bag-pudding.*
CHORUS. Old Sutcliff's wit, &c.

¹ This was Dr Matthew Sutcliff, Dean of Exeter, in the reign of King James I.; a person who had been one of the opponents of Parsons the Jesuit, in defence of the Reformed Religion. In the year 1616 he procured an Act of Parliament for incorporating himself and other divines to be provost and fellows of a college then founded at Chelsea, for promoting the study of polemic divinity, and vindicating the doctrines of the Reformation against all Popish writers. To carry this design into execution, he settled on the college four farms in Devonshire, of the value of £300 per annum, and the benefit of an extent on a statute, acknowledged by Sir Lewis Stukely, for £4000. By the Act of Parliament, the college was empowered to bring a stream of water from the river Lee for the use of the city of London a scheme similar to that then lately executed by Sir Hugh

AND. Most admirable ! A good eating song !

CHRIS. Let's walk in and practise it ; my bowels

Yearn till I'm in charity with all.

AND. A christian resolution, good Sir Christopher ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

MEANWELL with a letter in his hand, HEARSAY, SLICER.

MEANWELL reads.

*Sweet sir, I am most passionately yours,
To serve you all the ways I can : Priscilla.
Very well penn'd of a young chambermaid.
I do conceive your meaning, sweet Priscilla.
You see I have the happy fortune on't ;
A night for nothing, and entreated, too.*

SLICER. Thou dost not know how I do love thee.

Let me

Make use of this ; thou'lt have the like occasion.

Middleton). This foundation, although patronised both by King James and his sons, Prince Henry and Charles I., yet fell to decay. One range of building only, scarce an eighth of the intended edifice, was erected by Dr Sutcliff, at the expense of £3000. After lingering some time, suits were commenced about the title to the very ground on which the college stood, and by a decree of the Court of Chancery, in the time of Lord Coventry, three of the four farms were returned to Dr Sutcliff's heir. See "The Glory of Chelsey Colledge Revived," by John Darly, 4^o, 1862. Sutcliff's wit seems almost to have been proverbial. Beaumont, in his letter to Ben Jonson, says—

" 'Tis liquor that will find out Sutcliff's wit, Lie where he will, and make him write worse yet."

HEAR. Thou art the fawning'st fellow, Slicer !
Meanwell,

Hark here.

MEAN. For God's sake, be contented, sirs ;
I'm flesh and blood as well as you. Lieutenant, Think on your suburb beauties. Sweet intelligencer,

I will by no means bar you of your lady :
Your sin, I assure you, will be honourable.

[Exit MEANWELL.

SLICER. Pox o' your liquorish lips ! If that she don't

After this sealing forty weeks, deliver
Something unto thee as thy act and deed,
Say I can't prophesy.

HEAR. If I don't serve him
A trick he thinks not of——

SLICER. Didst mark how he Did apply himself to the knight all dinner !
I am afraid he plays the cunning factor,
And in another's name woos for himself.

HEAR. Let it go on ; let it work something farther :
'Tis almost ripe enough to crush. He hath not Crept high enough as yet to be sensible
Of any fall.

SLICER. Now is the time, or never.
This night, you know, he and his doxy meet ;
Let me alone to give them their good-morrow.
If that we carry things but one week longer
Without discovery, farewell London then :
The world's our own. He ne'er deserves to thrive
That doth not venture for it : wealth's then sweet,
When bought with hazard. Fate this law hath set ;

The fool inherits, but the wise must get.

ACT IV., SCENE 1.

CREDULOUS, HEARSAY, SLICER.

CRE. *My name's not Tribulation,
Nor holy Ananias :
I was baptiz'd in fashion,
Our vicar did hold bias.*

HEAR. What ! how now, Master Credulous ? so merry ?

CRE. Come, let's be mad : by yea and nay, my son Shall have the Turkish monarchy ; he shall Have it directly. The twelve companies
Shall be his kickshaws.

HEAR. Bashaws, sir, you mean.

CRE. Well, sir, what if I do ? Andrew the Great Turk ?

I would I were a pepper-corn,¹ if that
It sounds not well. Does't not ?

SLICER. Yes, very well.

CRE. I'll make it else great Andrew Mahomet,
Imperious Andrew Mahomet Credulous—
Tell me which name sounds best.

HEAR. That's as you speak 'em.

CRE. Oatmealman Andrew ! Andrew Oatmealman.

HEAR. Ottoman, sir, you mean.

CRE. Yes, Ottoman.

Then, Mistress Jane, Sir Thomas Bitefig's daughter,
That may be the She-Great-Turk, if she please me.

SLICER. The sign o' th' half-moon, that hangs at your door
Is not for nought.

¹ So Falstaff says ("First Part Henry IV.," act iii. sc. 3):
"An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse."

CRE. That's the Turk's arms, they say ;
The empire's destin'd to our house directly.
Hang shop-books ; give us some wine ! Hey for a noise¹

Of fiddlers now !

HEAR. The Great Turk loves no music.

CRE. Does he not so ? Nor I. I'll light tobacco

With my sum-totals ; my debt-books shall sole²
Pies at young Andrew's wedding ; cry you mercy,

I would say, gentlemen, the Great Turk's wedding.

My deeds shall be slic'd out in tailors' measures ;
They all employed in making Mistress Mahomet
New gowns against the time. Hang dirty wealth !

SLICER. What should the Great Turk's father do with wealth ?

CRE. 'Snigs, I would fain now hear some fighting news.

¹ A noise of fiddlers is a company or concert of them ; as in Ben Jonson's "Epicæne," act iii. sc. 3: "The smell of the venison, going through the street, will invite one noise of fiddlers or other."

So in "Bartholomew Fair," act iii. sc. 6: "Cry you mercy, sir ; will you buy a fiddle to fill up your noise ?"

In Marmyon's "Fine Companion," act iv. sc. 1: "He come but with a troope of wenches, and a noyse of fiddlers ; and play thee backe like Orpheus."

Again, in Dekker's "Belman of London," 1608, sig. G 2: "To bee up more earely then a noyse of shrugging fiddlers."

And in "Miscellaneous State Papers from 1501 to 1726," vol. i. p. 87: "After the which they had a very notable banquet ; the heavenly noise that was there, as well with strange instruments of music as otherwise, I cannot declare."

See also the examples in Mr Steevens's note on "Henry IV., Part II.," act ii. sc. 4.

² i.e., Be placed at the bottom of them, and act as the sole to the shoe.—Steevens.

Enter CASTER.

SLICER. There's one will furnish you, I warrant you.

CAS. Pox! plague! hell! death! damn'd luck! This 'tis!

The devil take all fortunes! Never man Came off so: quite and clean defunct, by heaven! Not a piece left.

CRE. What, all your ordnance lost?

CAS. But one to bear and lose it! All the world

Was, sure, against me.

CRE. 'Snigs, how many fell?

CAS. He threw twice twelve.

CRE. By'r Lady, a shrewd many!

CAS. The devil, sure, was in his hand, I think.

CRE. Nay, if the devil was against you, then——

CAS. But one for to be hit in all the time, And that, too, safe enough, to any one's thinking: 'T stood on eleven.

CRE. 'Slid, a mighty slaughter;

But did he stand upon eleven at once?

CAS. The plague take all impertinences. Peace!

CRE. These soldiers are so choleric, there is No dealing with 'em. Then they've lost the day?

CAS. 'Twas ten to one, by heaven, all the while.

CRE. And yet all kill'd at last! Hard fortune, faith!

What news from Brussels or the Hague? D' y' hear

Ought of the Turk's designs?

CAS. I'll make thee news for the Coranti, dotard.

CRE. Ay, the Coranti; what doth that say?

CAS. O hell! Thou foolish thing, Keep in that tongue of thine; or——

SLICER. Good now, peace :
He's very furious when he's mov'd.

HEAR. This 'twas.

You must be venturing without your fancy-man.

CRE. What officer's that fancy-man, lieutenant ?
Some great commander, sure.

CAS. Pox ! let it go ;
I'll win't again : 'twas but the relics of
An idle hundred.

CRE. 'Snigs, and well-remember'd.
You did receive the hundred that I sent you
To th' race this morning by your man, my bailiff ?

CAS. Take him away, his wine speaks in him
now.

CRE. Gods'nigs ! the farm is mine, and must be so.

SLICER. Debate these things another time, good friends.

Enter HAVE-AT-ALL.

Come, come, have patience. Od's my life, away !
There's Master Have-at-all is mad ; he'll spit you
If he but know you are a usurer.

CRE. A plot, a plot, to take away my life and farm ! [Exit.

HAVE. Fight, as I live, with any one. Lieutenant,

Do not come near me now, nor yet thou, Caster :
It works, 'fore Mars, it works ; I'll take my walk,

And if I do find any one, by Jove——

[Exit HAVE-AT-ALL.¹

CAS. What, 's he fox'd too ? Some drunken planet reigns,
And works upon the world. Provide my fancy,

¹ The old copy has it, Enter Have-at-all ; but it is an obvious error of the press.—Collier.

Good noble patron ; I'll win soberly,
I itch till I have beggar'd all the city.

[Exit CASTER.

HEAR. Till that you have undone yourself, you mean.

Enter MOTH.

MOTH. Ey save you both ; for dern love sayen soothly
Where is thylk amebly franklin, cleped Mean-well ?

HEAR. He's gone abroad.

MOTH. Lere me whylk way he wended.

SLICER. He is gone o'er the fields.

HEAR. To the knight's house.

MOTH. Why laugh you every dele ? So mote I
gone,
This goeth not aright ; I dread some covin.

[Exit MOTH.

SLICER. Now will he meet with Have-at-all ;
there'll be

A combat worthy chronicle. Let's go,
And see how this grave motion¹ will bestir him.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

HAVE-AT-ALL : after a while, MOTH ; SLICER and HEARSAY watching.

HAVE. What, no man yet march by ? Whoe'er comes next,
I'll give him one rap more for making me
Stay here so long.

¹ See note to "The Antiquary" [act i., sc. 1, vol. 13].

Enter MOTH.

So, so, here he is ; how shall
I do to know whe'r he be a gentleman,
Or yeoman, or servingman. I think
I'd best suppose him all, and beat him through Every degree ; and so I shall not wrong him.
What ? Who goes there ?

MOTH. Waes-heal,¹ thou gentle knight.

HAVE. Waes-heal, thou gentle knight ? Speak, what art thou ?

Speak quickly do. Villain, know'st thou not
me ?

MOTH. Now, by my troth, I know not your name ;

Whider I shall call you my Lord Dan John,
Or Dan Thomas, or Dan Robert, or Dan Albon.

I vow to God thou hast a full fair chine.

Upon my faith, art some officer.

HAVE. Have you the pox, sir ? speak.

MOTH. No.

HAVE. No, nor yet

An ache in your bones ?

MOTH. No.

HAVE. No ! why then you are

No gentleman ; Lieutenant Slicer says so.

This cudgel then serves turn.

MOTH. You will not foin,²

HAVE. I will not foin, but I will beat you,
sir.

¹ A term anciently used in salutation, or rather in drinking. See Selden's notes on the ninth song of Drayton's "Polyolbion," and [Steevens's] notes on "Macbeth," act i. sc. 7, for a particular account of the origin of this phrase.
—Steevens.

² [A term in fencing.]

MOTH. Why intermete¹ of what thou hast to done ;²

So leteth me alone, 't shall be thy best.

HAVE. I fanci'd you a beating ; you must have it.

You shall not say but I will show you favour : . . .
Choose whether you will be hacked with my sword,

Or bruis'd by my battoon.

MOTH. Dre not thy true

And poynant³ morglay⁴ out of shete. Lo, thus Eftsoons, sir knight, I greet thee lowting low.

HAVE. Down lower yet.

MOTH. Reuth⁵ on my grey haire.

HAVE. Yet lower. So, then, thus I do bestride thee.

MOTH. Tubal the sonne of Lamech did yfind Music by knocking hammers upon anviles.

Let go thine blows ; thylke art is no compleat.⁶

HAVE. Dost thou make me a smith, thou rogue ? a Tubal ?

¹ [Cartwright's adoption of the English of a period of which he was evidently very ignorant, has made his character of "The Antiquary" a very tedious and troublesome one. By intermete we are here to understand intermit ; but there is no such word in early English. Intermit occurs in Coleridge's "Glossary," 1859.]

² To do.

³ [Old copy, paynant.]

⁴ Morglay was the sword of Bevis of Southampton. It afterwards became a cant word for a sword in general. See "Every Man in his Humour," act iii. sc. 1 ; also "Every Woman in her Humour," 1609, sig. D 4—

"Had I been accompanied with my toledo or morglay."

⁵ Pity.

⁶ Now complete. The passage requires this explanation, or poor Moth's argument seems to want force, his present hopes being founded on a supposition that all possible discoveries to be made by beating have been already made.

MOTH. Harrow¹ alas! Flet, Englund, flet, Englund!

Dead is Edmond.

HAVE. Take that for history.

O brave lieutenant, now thy dinner works!

MOTH. I nis not Edmond Ironside, God wot.

HAVE. More provocation yet? I'll seal thy lips.

MOTH. A twenty-devil way! So did the Saxon²

Upon thylke plain of Sarum done to death

By treachery the lords of merry Englund,

Nem esur Saxes.

HAVE. Villain, dost abuse me

In unbaptized language? Do not answer:

[MOTH entreats by signs.

If that thou dost, by Jove, I'll strangle thee.

Do you make mouths, you rascal, thus at me?

You're at dumb-service now. Why, this is more

Unsufferable than your old patch'd gibberish:

This silence is abuse. I'll send thee to

The place of it, where thou shalt meet with Oswald,

¹ Moth here seems to allude to the following circumstance in the English History: "But upon the morne followynge, both hostes joynd agayne, and fought egerly: contynuyng whych fyghte, Edrycus espying Edmunde to be at advauntage of wyunnyng of the feld; sodaynly pyght a dead mannes hed upon a speare head, and cryed to the host of Englyshmen, He, he, ye Englyshmen, and save youre selves, lo here is the heade of Edmunde your kinge.—Fabyan's "Chronicle,"

² Verategan, in his "Restitution of Decayed Intelligence," 1634, p. 130, gives the following account of this transaction:—"King Hingistus prepared them a feast; and after the Brittaines were well whitled with wine, he fell to taunting and gurning at them; whereupon blowes ensued; and the British nobility there present, being in all three hundred, were all of them slaine; as William of Malmesbury reporteth: though others make the number more, and say that the Saxons had each of them a seax (a kind of crooked knife) closely in his pocket, and that at the watch-word, Nem cower seaxes, which is, take your seaxes, they suddainely, and at unwares, slew the Brittaines."

Vortigern, Harold, Hengist, Horsa, Knute, Alured, Edgar, and Cunobeline.

[SLICER, HEARSAY step in.

Thus, thus I sheathe my sword.

SLICER. Redoubted knight,

Enough : it is thy foe doth vanquish'd lie
Now at thy mercy. Mercy not withstand ;
For he is one the truest knight alive,
Though conquer'd now he lie on lowly ground.

HAVE. Thou ow'st thy life to my lieutenant, caitiff :

Breathe and be thankful.

MOTH. I rech¹ not thine yeft ;²
Maugre³ thine head ; algate⁴ I suffer none.
I am thine lefe, thine decre, mine Potluck Joan.

SCENE III.

ANDREW, PRISCILLA.

AND. Fairest of things, tralucent creature —
Hang me,

If I do know what's next.

PRIS. This meant to me ?

AND. Fairest of things, tralucent creature, rather,
Obscured deity—'Tis gone again.

Lady, will you eat a piece of gingerbread ?

PRIS. You might have better manners, than to scoff

One of my breeding.

AND. Hark ! Indeed I love you.

PRIS. Alas !

AND. I vow, I burn in love, as doth
A penny fagot.

¹ Care not.

² In spite of.

³ Gift.

⁴ Always.

PRIS. Heigho!

AND. And I shall

Blaze out, sir reverence, if ye do not quench me.

PRIS. Indeed now?

AND. Though I say't that should not say't,
I am affected towards you strangely.

PRIS. Now,

Who'd have thought it?

AND. There's a thing each night
Comes to my bed's head, and cries, Matrimony, Matrimony, Andrew.

PRIS. God forbid!

AND. It is

Some spirit that would join us.

PRIS. Goodly, goodly.

AND. Then do I shake all over.

PRIS. Doth it so?

AND. Then shake again.

PRIS. I pray you now.

AND. Then cry,

Fairest of things, tralucet creature, rather,
Obscured deity, sweet Mistress Jane,
I come, I come.

PRIS. Sweet sir, you are deceiv'd;
I'm but her woman. Here she comes herself.

Enter MISTRESS JANE.

AND. Now, as my father saith, I would I were
A cucumber, if I know what to do.

JANE. Why, how now, Pris? Who's that that useth you
So lovingly?

AND. Fairest of things—'tis one Tralucet creature—'tis—ay, that it is,
One—

PRIS. That would willingly run out of doors,
If that he had but lay enough.

AND. I say——

JANE. Nay, ben't afraid ; here's none shall do you harm.

AND. 'Tis one that brought his pigs to the wrong market.

You keep your woman here so fine, that I Had like t' have made a proper business on't, Before I was aware. If anything Do prove amiss, indeed, la, you shall be The father on't. But know, tralucet creature, I am come off entire, and now am yours, Whole Andrew Credulous, your servant's servant.

JANE. Methinks you contradict yourself: how can you

Be wholly mine, and yet my servant's servant ?

AND. I do but compliment in that (I see Downright's the best way here); if thou canst love, I can love too. La, thee there, now ! I'm rich.

JANE. I use not to look after riches ; 'tis The person that I aim at.

AND. That is me :

I'm proper, handsome, fair, clean-limb'd—I'm rich.

JANE. I must have one that can direct and guide me :

A guardian rather than a husband ; for I'm foolish yet.

AND. Now see the luck on't, lady ; So am I too, i' faith.

JANE. And whoe'er hath me, Will find me to be one of those things, which His care must first reform.

AND. Do not doubt that ; I have a head for reformation : This noddle here shall do it. I am rich.

JANE. Riches create no love : I fear you mean To take me for formality only ; As some staid piece of household stuff, perhaps, Fit to be seen 'mongst other ornaments :

Or, at the best, I shall be counted but
 A name of dignity ; not entertain'd
 For love, but state ; one of your train ; a thing
 Took to wipe off suspicion from some fairer,
 To whom you have vow'd homage.

AND. Do not think
 I've any plots or projects in my head.
 I will do anything for thee, that thou
 Canst name or think on.

PRIS. Pray you try him, mistress.
 By my virginity, I think he'll flinch.

AND. By my virginity (which is as good
 As yours, I'm sure)—by my virginity,
 If that we men have any such thing (as We men have such a thing); I do believe
 I will not flinch. Alas! you don't know Andrew.

JANE. Can you obtain but so much respite from Your other sovereign's service, as to keep
 Your eye from gazing on her for awhile ?

AND. If I do look on any woman—nay,
 If I do cast a sheep's eye upon any
 But your sweet self, may I lose one of mine !
 Marry, I'll keep the other howsoe'er.

JANE. I know not how I may believe you : you'll Swear you ne'er cast a glance on any, when
 Your eye hath baited at each face you met.

AND. Blind me, good, now : being you mistrust,
 I will

Be blinded with this handkerchief ; you shall See that I love you now. So, let me have
 But any reasonable thing to lead me home,
 I do not care, though't be a dog, so that
 He knows the way, or hath the wit t' inquire it.

JANE. That care, sir, shall be mine.

[Exeunt JANE and PRISCILLA.]

AND. I doubt not but I shall be in the Chronicle for this,
 Or in a ballad else. This handkerchief

Shall be hung up i' th' parish church, instead
 Of a great silken flag to fan my grave :
 With my arms in't, portray'd in good blue thread,
 With this word underneath—This, this was he
That shut his eyes because he would not see.
 Hold, who comes there ?

Enter MEANWELL, SHAPE.

MEAN. One, sir, to lead you home.

AND. Who ? tutor Meanwell ?

[SHAPE counterfeits MISTRESS JANE'S voice.

SHAPE. Yes, I do commit you
 Unto your trusty friend : if you perform
 This vow, we may——

AND. I'll say your sentence out—
 Be man and wife.

SHAPE. If you'll do something else
 That I'll propose.

AND. Pray make your own conditions.

SHAPE. You'll promise me you'll not be jealous
 of me ?

AND. Do what you will, I'll trust you.

SHAPE. Never hire
 Any to tempt me ?

AND. By this light (I would say,
 By this darkness), I never will.

SHAPE. Nor mark
 On whom I laugh ?

AND. No.

SHAPE. Nor suspect my smiles,
 My nods, my winks ?

AND. No, no.

SHAPE. Nor yet keep count
 From any gallant's visit ?

AND. I'll ne'er reckon :
 You shall do what you will.

SHAPE. You'll never set

Great chests and forms against my chamber-door ;
Nor pin my smock unto your shirt a-nights,
For fear I should slip from you ere you wake ?

AND. As I do hope for day, I will not.

SHAPE. Give me

Some small pledge from you to assure your love ;
If that you yet prove false, I may have something To witness your inconstancy. I'll take
This little ruby—this small blushing stone
From your fair finger.

AND. Take it, sweet. There is
A diamond in my band-string ; if you have
A mind to that, I pray, make use of't too.

SHAPE. In troth, a stone of lustre. I assure you,
It darts a pretty light, a veget spark,¹
It seems an eye upon your breast.

AND. Nay, take it,
For love's sake, take it then : leave nothing that Looks like an eye about me.

SHAPE. My good Andrew,
'Cause of thy resolution, I'll perform
This office for thee. Take my word for't, this Shall ne'er betray thee. [Exit SHAPE.

AND. Farewell, honest Jany ;
I cannot see to thank thee, my sweet Jany.
Tutor, your hand ; good tutor, lead me wisely.

MEAN. Take comfort, man ; I have good news for thee :
Thine eyes shall be thine own before next morning.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

SHAPE, CHIRURGEON, MERCER.

SHAPE. He's a good friend of mine, and I presume
Upon your secrecy.

¹ A lively spark.

CHIR. O sir, the deed
By which it came was not more close. D' y' think
I would undo myself by twitting? 'Twere
To bring the gallants all about mine ears,
And make me mine own patient. I'm faithful
And secret, though a barber.

SHAPE. Nay, but hear me ;
He's very modest : 'twas his first attempt Procur'd him this infirmity. He will Be bashful, I am sure, and won't be known
Of any such thing at the first. You must
Be sure to put him to't.

CHIR. Let me alone :
He knows not yet the world, I do perceive.
It is as common now with gentlemen,
As 'tis to follow fashion : only here
Lieth the difference, that they keep in this
A little longer. I shall have so much Upon your word, sir ?

SHAPE. If you do perform
The cure by that time, twenty pieces, sir :
You are content ?

MER. Yes, sir.

CHIR. It shall be done [Exit SHAPE.]
According to your own prescription.
Sit down, I pray you, sir : this gentleman
Is a good friend of yours.

MER. Indeed he is a very honest man,
As any one can wish to deal with, verily.

CHIR. Believe't, he loves you very well.

MER. I am most ready
To do him any service truly. Pray you,
Good brother, don't delay me : I'm in haste.

CHIR. Indeed-and truly-verily-good brother!
How could these milksop words e'er get him company
That could procure the pox ? [Aside.] Where do you feel

You[r] grief most trouble you ?

MER. I'm very well : what mean you, brother ?

CHIR. Nay, be not so modest :

'Tis no such heinous fault, as that you should Seek thus to hide it ; mere ill-fortune only——

MER. Surely you do forget yourself.

CHIR. Come, come,

He told me you'd be shamefac'd : you must be Wary hereafter.

MER. I do perceive

He is a little mad indeed : the gentleman
Told me so much just as I came along. [Aside.]

Yes, yes, I will be wary ; I'll take heed.

Come, pray y', despatch me.

CHIR. So, I like you now.

It is the custom of most gentlemen
Not to confess until they feel their bones
Begin t' admonish 'em.

MER. You are i' th' right.

Good friend, make haste ; I've very urgent business.

CHIR. Not rashly neither. Is your gristle sound ?

Methinks 'tis very firm as yet to the touch.

You fear no danger there as yet, sir, do you ?

MER. No, I'll assure you. He must have his humour :

I see he's not to be cross'd. [Aside.]

CHIR. When did you

Feel the first grudging on't ? 'Tis not broke out
In any place ?

MER. No, no : I pray y', despatch me.

CHIR. These things desire deliberation ;
Care is requir'd.

MER. Good brother, go t' your chest.

CHIR. How can I know what med'cines to apply,
If that you tell me not where lies your grief ?

MER. Nay, good, now let me go.

CHIR. I must not, sir,
Nor will not, truly. Trust me, you will wish
You had confess'd, and suffer'd me in time,
When you shall come to dry-burnt racks of mutton,

The syringe, and the tub.¹

MER. So : now enough.
Pray fetch me what you promis'd.

CHIR. Are you wild
Or mad? I do protest, I ne'er did meet
A gentleman of such perverseness yet.
I find you just as I was told I should.

MER. I lose the taking, by my swear, of²
As much, whiles that I am receiving this.

CHIR. I will not hinder you, if that you do
Prefer your gain before your health.

MER. Well then,
I pray you tell it out : we tradesmen are not
Masters of our own time.

CHIR. What would you have?

MER. What would I have? as if you did not know!
Come, come, leave jesting now at last, good brother.

CHIR. I am in earnest, sir.

MER. Why, I would have
My money, sir ; the twenty pieces that
The gentleman did give you order now

¹ [Old copy, syren.] So in "Timon of Athens," act iv. sc. 3—

"The tub-fast and the diet."

See a note on that passage, Shakespeare, viii. 409, edit. 1778.—Steevens.

² [Old copy repeats taking after of, as it appears, erroneously, since it spoils the sense, and is not essential to the metre, such metre as it is! By my swear, by my oath : it is an unusual phrase, but occurs again just below.]

To pay me for the velvet that he bought
This morning of me.

CHIR. O, the gentleman——

MER. You should not make a laughingstock,
good brother,

Of one that wrongs you not; I do profess
I wont be fubb'd, ensure yourself.

CHIR. The gentleman!

O, O, the gentleman! Is this the cure
I should perform? Truly I dare not venture
Upon such desperate maladies.

MER. You are but merrily dispos'd?

CHIR. Indeed, they are Too high for my small quality. Verily Perhaps, good brother, you might perish under Mine hands truly. I do profess, I am not Any of your bold mountebanks in this.

MER. You're still dispos'd——

CHIR. To laugh at you, good brother.

Gull'd, by my swear: by my swear, gull'd! he told
me

You had a small infirmity upon you,
A grief of youth or two: and that I should Have twenty pieces for the cure. He ask'd you,
If that you were content? you answered, yes.
I was in hope I had gain'd a patient more.
Your best way is to make haste after him.

MER. Now could I beat myself for a wise fool
That I was, thus to trust him. [Exit.

CHIR. B' w' y', brother.

'Fore God, a good one. O, the gentleman!

[Exit laughing.]

SCENE V.

RHYMEWELL, BAGSHOT, CATCHMEY, SIR CHRISTOPHER: a song at a window, congratulating (as they think) MASTER MEANWELL'S marriage.

1. *Whiles early light springs from the skies,
A fairer from your bride doth rise;
A brighter day doth thence appear,
And makes a second morning there.
Her blush doth shed
All o'er the bed
Clean shamefac'd beams,
That spread in streams,
And purple round the modest air.*
2. *I will not tell what shrieks and cries,
What angry pishes, and what fies,
What pretty oaths then newly born,
The list'ning taper heard there sworn:
Whiles froward she Most peevishly
Did yielding fight
To keep o'er night,
What she'd have proffer'd you ere morn.*
3. *Fair, we know, maids do refuse
To grant what they do come to lose.
Intend a conquest, you that wed;
They would be chastely ravished.
Not any kiss
From Mistress Pris,
If that you do,
Persuade and woo:
Know pleasure's by extorting fed.*
4. *O, may her arms wax black and blue
Only by hard encircling you:*

*May she round about you twine,
Like the easy-twisting vine ;
And whiles you sip
From her full lip
Pleasures as new
As morning dew,
Let those soft ties your hearts combine.*

SINGER. God give you joy, Master Meanwell !
God give your worship good morrow !

RHYME. Come, let's be going.

CHRIS. Hold, a blow I'll have,
One jerk at th' times, wrapp'd in a benediction
O' th' spouse's teeming, and I'll go with you.

A Song.

*Now thou, our future brother,
That shalt make this spouse a mother,
Spring up, and Dod's blessing on't :¹
Show thy little sorrel pate,
And prove regenerate,
Before thou be brought to the font.*

*May the parish surplice be Cut in pieces quite for thee,
To wrap thy soft body about ;
So 'twill better service do,
Reformed thus into
The state of an orthodox clout.*

¹ John Dod, a learned and pious divine, born in Cheshire, educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, and afterwards successively minister of Hanwell, Oxfordshire, Fenny Drayton, Leicestershire, Canons Ashby and Fawsley in Northamptonshire, though for a time silenced in each of them. He is commonly called the Decalogist, having with Robert Cleaver, another Puritan, written "An Exposition on the Ten Commandments." He died at Fawsley in 1645, aged about ninety years. [For whatever the preceding account may be worth it is retained ; but Dod's blessing seems to be merely a whimsical corruption of God's blessing.]

*When thou shalt leave the cradle,
And shalt begin to waddle,
And trudge in thy little apron;
May'st thou conceive a grace
Of half an hour's space,
And rejoice in thy Friday capon.*

*For an error that's the flock's,
Name Master Paul, but urge St Knox;¹
And at every reform'd dinner,
Let cheese come in, and preaching,
And by that third course teaching
Confirm an unsatisfi'd sinner.*

*Thence grow up to hate a ring,
And defy an offering;
And learn to sing what others say.
Let Christ-tide be thy fast,
And Lent thy good repast:
And regard not an holy-day.*

Enter CONSTABLE and Assistants.

CON. Lay hold on them! lay hold on them, I say!

I'll hamper them.

CATCH. Hell take your headlong zeal!
You must be jerking at the times, forsooth.
I am afraid the times will 'scape, and we,
The men of them, shall suffer now the scourge.

CON. Let none escape.

CHRIS. 'Twas godliness, verily:
It was a hymn I warbled.

CON. Thou dost lie,
It was no hymn, it was a song. Is this

¹ This was John Knox, the celebrated reformer in Scotland. See his character in Robertson's "History of Scotland," i. 130.

Your filthy rendezvous ? you shall be taught
Another tune.

CHRIS. I do beseech you, show
Merciful cruelty, and as 'twere a kind
Of pitiful hard-heartedness. I'm strong.

[They bring in ANDREW and PRISCILLA.]

CON. I'm glad you told me so, I will provide Your ward accordingly. Drag 'em out both.

AND. Let me but send to th' ordinary.

CON. You shall not ;

The ord'nary hath sent to you. No bail :
I will take none. I'll suffer no such sneaks.
As you to offend this way : it doth belong
T' your betters, sir.

AND. Here's a sufficient man,
I do assure you ; take my word for that.

CON. This staff was made to knock down sin.
I'll look

There shall be no advoutry¹ in my ward,
But what is honest. I'll see justice done
As long as I'm in office. Come along. [Exeunt.]

ACT V., SCENE 1.

SIR THOMAS BITEFIG as sick, JANE.

SIR T. Now that I have made even, girl, with heaven,
Though I am past the worst, and I perceive
My dinner only griev'd me ; yet 'cause life's Frail and uncertain, let me counsel thee—
'Tis good to be beforehand still. First, then,
I charge thee, lend no money ; next, serve God ;
If ever thou hast children, teach them thrift ;
They'll learn religion fast enough themselves.

¹ Adultery.

Nay, do not weep, but hearken. When heaven shall Please to call in this weary soul of mine,
 Ben't idle in expense about my burial :
 Buy me a shroud—any old sheet will serve
 To clothe corruption ; I can rot without Fine linen ; 'tis but to enrich the grave,
 And adorn stench—no reverence to the dead,
 To make them crumble more luxuriously.
 One torch will be sufficient to direct
 The footsteps of my bearers. If there be Any so kind as to accompany
 My body to the earth, let them not want
 For entertainment : prythee, see they have
 A sprig of rosemary dipp'd in common water,
 To smell to, as they walk along the streets.
 Eatings and drinkings are no obsequies.
 Raise no oppressing pile to load my ashes ;
 But if thou'lt needs b' at charges of a tomb,
 Five or six foot of common stone, engrav'd
 With a good hopeful word, or else a couple
 Of capital letters filled up with pitch,
 Such as I set upon my sheep, will serve :
 State is not meet for those that dwell in dust.
 Mourn as thou pleasest for me ; plainness shows True grief. I give thee leave to do it for Two or three years, if that thou shalt think fit ;
 'Twill save expense in clothes. And so now be
 My blessing on thee, and my means hereafter.

JANE. I hope heaven will not deal so rigidly
 With me, as to preserve me to th' unwelcome
 Performance of these sad injunctions.

SCENE II.

To them MEANWELL.

MEAN. Good health unto you, sir.

SIR T. I have the more

By reason of the care you took in sending
A confessor unto me.

MEAN. I? a confessor?

Sure, there is some design, some trick or other
Put on you by those men, who never sleep,
Unless they've cheated on that day.

SIR T. I hope

You do mean your partners my good friends?

MEAN. They ne'er deserve the name of friends;
they do

Covet, not love. If any came from them,
It was some vulture in a holy habit,
Who did intend your carcase, not your safety.
Indeed I know not of't; 'T've all this while Appear'd another to you than I am.

[Discloseth himself.]

Perhaps you know me now. I'm he whom you
Pleas'd to forbid your house—whom Master
Credulous

Takes leave to style lost man and vagabond.

SIR T. That I forbade you my house, was only
In care to my daughter, not in hate to you.

MEAN. That I frequented it without your leave,
Was both in love to you and to your daughter:
That I have all this while liv'd thus disguis'd,
Was only to avert the snare from you,
Not to entrap you: that you might not be
Blinded by those who, like to venomous beasts,
Have only sight to poison; that you might not
Ruin your daughter in a compliment.

SIR T. This may b' your plot, and this discovery
Feign'd only to secure your own designs;
For't cannot sink into me, that they durst
Make mirth of my repentance, and abuse
My last devotion with a scene of laughter.

MEAN. They dare beyond your thought. When parted this
Your confessor?

SIR T. You could not choose but meet him :
He is scarce yet at home.

MEAN. If that you dare
But venture with me home, I'll almost promise
I'll make it plain they've put a trick upon you.

SIR T. Though every step were so much toward my grave,
I'd tread them o'er with comfort, that I might Discover this religious villany. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

HEARSAY, SLICER, and SHAPE in his Confessor's habit.

HEAR. Come, my good vulture, speak ; what prey ? what mirth ?

SLICER. What income, my dear holiness ? what sport ?

SHAPE. Give me the chair : imagine me the knight

(When I sit down), and (when I stand) the confessor.

[*As he is thus acting, MEANWELL and SIR
THOMAS discover themselves above.*]

Thus I come in peace to thy soul, good son.

'Tis you must give it, father : I am ill,

I'm very ill ; fit only now for heaven.

My soul would fain be flying, wer'e't not for

A sin or two that clogs her. But for a sin

Or two that clogs her ? Take heed ; don't, so near

Your last deliverance, play the sophister

With heaven. A sin or two ! why, I've heard say

You're wont to screw your wretched tenants up

To th' utmost farthing, and then stand upon

The third rent-capon. Then he answers me

In the small doleful tune of a country wench
 Examin'd by th' official for the mischance
 Of a great belly caught at a Whitson-ale :¹
I could not help it. Then it is your custom,
 When you invite, to think your meat laid out,
 You write your beef disburs'd, are wont to call

For the return of't just as for a debt ;
True. That two chimneys ne'er yet smok'd at once

In all your buildings. All most true. That you
 Are wont to keep an untouch'd capon, till Corruption makes it able to walk out
 And visit the barn-door again. I could Say much more, but I had rather have you Come so much nearer pardon, as t' accuse
 Yourself by your own mouth.

SLICER. How grave the rogue was !

SHAPE. I'll do't as strictly as mine enemy.

SIR T. I cannot hold : I'll break in as I am,
 And take my vengeance whilst my fury's hot.

[Above.]
 MEAN. Repress it, sir, awhile ; h' hath but begun. [Above.]

SHAPE. Then thus he drawls it out, *I do confess
 I've been addicted to frugality.*

Son, do not mince : pray, call it covetousness.

Imprimis, It hath ever been my custom

To ride beyond an inn to save my horse-meat.

Item, When once I had done so, and found

No entertainment, I beguil'd the children

Of their parch'd peas : my man being left to that

We make the emblem of mortality.

What? Grass, you mean? Or sweet hay, which you please.

¹ See Note to "The Antiquary" [act iv., vol. 13].

HEAR. Methinks this is truly coming to a reckoning.

He doth account for's sins with Item so.

SHAPE. Item, I've often bought a Cheapside custard,

*And so refresh'd my soul under my cloak,
As I did walk the streets. Cloaking of sins,
Although they be but eating sins, I do
Pronounce most dangerous. I find this so,
I'd almost lost mine eyes by't, being justled.*

SLICER. O thou rich soul of roguery!

SHAPE. Moreover,

*I once sung Psalms with servants, where I lodg'd,
And took part with 'em in their lovely reliques;
Truly my soul did lust, they were temptations.
What! sing that you might eat? It is the sin
O' th' brethren, son; but that their reliques are Whole widows' houses.*

HEAR. O thou preaching devil!

SHAPE. *Item, I entered into a chandler's shop,
And eat my bread in secret, whilst my man
Fed on the wholesome steam of candle-suet,
Item, which grieves me most, I did make bold
With the black puddings of my needy tailor:
Satan was strong; they did provoke me much.*

SIR T. Wretch that I was, to trust my bosom to
One so exactly bad that, if the book
Of all men's lives lay open to his view,
Would meet no sin unpractis'd by himself.
I will rush in.

MEAN. Good sir, keep close awhile.

[Above.]
[Above.]

SHAPE. I see no tears, no penitential tears.
*Alas! I cannot weep, mine eyes are pumice:
But alms I hope may yet redeem. Alms given
In a large manner, son. Won't fifty pounds Wipe off my score? If doubled, 't may do something.*

Can I be sav'd no cheaper? Take this, then,

And pray for me. With that I thus dismiss'd him.
 Bless'd son, for now I dare pronounce thee bless'd,
 Being thou'st pour'd thus out thy soul.—The wolf!
 The wolf! 'Sfoot, peace, we're in the noose;
 We are betray'd; yon's Meanwell and the knight!
 Truly he is as good a man as any
 I ever yet confess'd—don't look that way—
 A very honest, charitable man,
 Full of sincerity and true devotion.

SIR T. Patience itself would now turn furious.
 Let's for some officers.

[Exeunt SIR THOMAS and MEANWELL.]

SHAPE. Discover'd all! —
 Religion is unlucky to me.

HEAR. Man,
 Perfidious man! there is no trust in thee!

SLICER. I never lik'd this Meanwell; I did always

See treachery writ in's forehead. I well hop'd
 H' had been in prison with his wench.

SHAPE. Leave railing.
 Along with me. There is left one way more;
 The cat may yet perhaps light on all four.¹

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

SIR THOMAS BITEFIG, MEANWELL, CONSTABLE, WATCHMEN.

SIR T. What, gone! Upon my life, they did mistrust.

MEAN. They are so beaten, that they smell an officer,
 As crows do powder.

SIR T. Watchman, call you forth

¹ [i. e., All fours.]

The mistress of the house imprimis; for
 They have their lurking-hole near hand most certain. [Exit OFFICER.]

Enter MOTH and POTLUCK, as man and wife.

MOTH. *Denuncio vobis gaudium magnum,
 Robertus de Tinea electus est in sedem hospitalem,
 Et assumit sibi nomen Galfridi.*

Joy comes to our house: I, Robert Moth, am
 Chesen into thylk hospital seat,
 Thylk bason of Joan Potluck, vintner's widow,
 And do transmue¹ my name to Geffery.
 New foysons² byn ygraced with new titles.
 Come, buss. [Kisses her.]

POT. Fie! Master Geffery, I swear
 You make m' asham'd 'fore all this company.

SIR T. Sir, if you be the master of this house,
 You've harbour'd here a company of cheating
 Villains we are come to apprehend.

POT. Pray y', look,
 Search every corner: here's no cheats. I'm sure
 The house was clear before your worship enter'd.

CON. Make fast the doors, for fear they do escape.

Let's in, and ferret out these cheating rake-hells.

[As the WATCHMEN go in and out about the rooms, HEARSAY, SLICER, and SHAPE, mingle themselves with them, being accounted watchmen, and so pass without discovery.]

Enter 1ST WATCHMAN and HEARSAY.

1ST WATCH. 'Tis very certain they are not in the house.

¹ Change.

² Plenty, abundance.

SIR T. They had no time to get away.

HEAR. Why, then,

It may be, being they are such cunning fellows,
They have the trick of going invisible.

Enter 2D WATCHMAN and SLICER.

2D WATCH. There's no place left unsearch'd but pots and mouseholes.

SLICER. They're either gone or in the house, that's certain.

2D WATCH. That cannot be: the doors were shut, I'm sure,
And so they could not get out; the rooms then are
All search'd, and so they cannot be within.

SLICER. I'll lay my neck to a farthing, then, they're vanish'd.

HEAR. Sunk like the Queen; they'll rise at Queenhive, sure!¹

Enter CONSTABLE and other WATCHMEN, and SHAPE among 'em, bringing in CREDULOUS and CASTER.

SHAPE. Most certain, these are two of them:
for this

Old knave, I'll take my oath that he is one.

CON. Confess, confess: where are your other comrades?

¹ The story here alluded to is told in an old play, entitled "The Famous Chronicle of king Edward the first, surnamed Edward Longshankes, with his returne from the holy land. Also the life of Llevelen rebell in Wales. Lastly, the sinking of Queene Elinor, who sunck at Charing cross, and rose againe at Potters hith, now named Queene-hith. By George Peele." 4°, 1593, 1599. See also a ballad on the same subject in Evans's "Old Ballads," vol i. p. 237. [Peele's play is, of course, printed in his works by Dyce.]

CRE. I am as honest as the skin that is Between thy brows.

CON. What skin between my brows ?
What skin, thou knave ? I am a Christian ;
And, what is more, a constable ! What skin ?¹

SIR T. You are mistaken, friends.

CON. I cry you mercy.

SHAPE. The constable may call you anything
In the king's name, upon suspicion.

SIR T. We're cheated, friends : these men o' th'
ordinary

Have gull'd us all this while, and now are gone.

CAS. I am undone ! Ne'er let me live, if that I did not think they would gull me. I perceive Fancy doth much : see, how 'tis come to pass !

CRE. Where is my son ? God bless him !

Where is Andrew ?

Pray God they have not taken him along :
He hath a perilous wit to be a cheat ;
H'd quickly come to be his Majesty's taker.

CON. I took one Andrew Credulous this morning
In dishonest adultery with a trull ;
And if he be your son, he is in prison.

CRE. Their villainy, o' my life ! Now, as I am
A freeman and a grocer, I had rather have Found forty pounds. I pray, go fetch him.

[Exit OFFICER.]

SIR T. I'm sorry that your son takes these lewd courses ;

He is not fit to make a husband of.

CRE. Do not condemn before you hear. I'll warrant,
Though he be guilty, yet he's innocent.

¹ [The Constable's ideas had become confused, and he thought that Credulous was taxing him with having been circumcised.]

*Enter HAVE-AT-ALL.*¹

MOTH. Hent¹ him, for dern love, hent him; I done drad

His visage foul, yfrounc'd² with glowing eyne.

HAVE. I come t' excuse my ruder usage of you;
I was in drink when that I did it: 'twas
The plot of those base knaves, I hear, are gone,
To teach me valour by the strength of wine;
Naming that courage which was only fury:
It was not wilfully.

MOTH. I do not rech
One bean for all. This buss is a blive guerdon.³
Hence carlishnesse yferre. 'Tis a sooth saw,
Had I but venged all mine herme,
Mine cloak had not been furred half so werme.

Enter OFFICERS with ANDREW, PRISCILLA, and the four that were taken at the window singing.

CRE. Now, sir, you shall hear all. Come,
Andrew, tell me,
How cam'st thou hither?

AND. Truly, Master Meanwell
Told me that I should meet with Mistress Jane;
And there I found her chambermaid!

CRE. D' y' see?
Your chambermaid, Sir Thomas! Out, you whore.

AND. Take heed what you say, father; she's my wife.

¹ Take hold of him.—T.

² Decorated or adorned [in the forehead or brow.] So in Milton's "Penseroso"—

"Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With Attie boy to hunt;
But kerchief'd in a comely cloud."

—Steevens (altered).

³ Quick reward. [But it may be doubted, perhaps, if Cartwright did not intend blithe, i.e., glad or joyful.]

CRE. I would thou'rt in thy grave, then ; 'twere the better
Fortune o' th' two.

PRIS. Indeed, this reverend man join'd us i' th' prison.

CHRIS. Marriage is a bond ;
So no place fitter to perform it in !

SIR T. Send for my daughter hither ; we'll know
all.

What are you, sir ?

CHRIS. A workman in the clergy.

CON. Yes, this is one I took at the window singing,

With these three other vagrant fellows here.

CHRIS. I was in body there, but not in mind,
So that my sin is but inchoately perfect ;
And I, though in a fault, did not offend ;
And that for three reasons. First, I did yield
Only a kind of unwilling consent.
Secondly, I was drawn, as 'twere, by their Impulsive gentleness (mark, sir, I'm strong).
Thirdly, I deem'd it not a woman's shambles.
Fourthly and lastly, that I sung was only
An holy wish. Once more, beloved——

SIR T. Peace !

Y' have said enough already. How came you
To sing beneath the window ?

RIME. Master Hearsay

Told us that Master Meanwell was new-married,
And thought it good that we should gratify him.
And show ourselves to him in a Fescennine.¹

CRE. That rascal Meanwell was the cause of all :

I would I had him here.

¹ i.e., A nuptial ditty : from Fescennia, or Fescennium, a town in Italy, where these kinds of songs were first practised.—Steevens.

SIR T. Why, this is he,
Sir Robert Littleworth his son : he hath Disclos'd their villanies ; he is no cheat.

MEAN. God save you, Master Credulous ; you
have
Forgotten me, perhaps : I'm somewhat chang'd.
You see, your lost man's found ; your vagabond
Appears at last.

CRE. Go, you are a gibing scab.
Leave off your flouting : you're a beardless boy,
I am a father of children.

MEAN. And your son
Will be so shortly, if he han't ill-luck
To vex you more : that hundred pounds you sent To Master Caster, Shape i' th' habit of A country-fellow gull'd you of.

CRE. That rascal !
Thou show'st thy wit t' abuse an old man thus :
As God shall mend me, I will hamper thee.
Thou'st been disguis'd here all this while, thou hast !

Would I were bray'd in mine own mortar,¹ if
I do not call th' in question the next term,
For counterfeiting of the king's subjects.
Come away from him, sirrah, come along.

[Exeunt CREDULOUS, ANDREW, and PRISCILLA.]

¹ To bray, to pound, or grind small—

“ I'll burst him, I will bray
His bones, as in a mortar.”

“ Except you would bray christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war.”—Bacon. See Johnson's Dictionary, v. Bray.

It also means only to stamp with the feet : thus in For-tescue's “Foreste of Historica,” 1571, fol. 68 : “When Apelles his horse was brought into the place the other began to braie and stirre, as is their common usage.”—Collier.

MEAN. There's a trunk they've left behind ; I have
Seiz'd it for you, so that you'll be no loser.
SIR T. If you can find a way whereby I may Reward this courtesy of yours, I shall Confess myself engaged doubly to you—
Both for the benefit and its requital.

Enter JANE.

MEAN. The appearance of your daughter here suggests Something to ask, which yet my thoughts call boldness.

SIR T. Can she suggest yet any good, that is
So expert grown in this flesh-brokery ?

MEAN. O, do not blot that innocence with suspicion,
Who never came so near a blemish yet,
As to be accus'd. To quit you of such thoughts,
I did receive a tempting letter from
That strumpet that's gone out (as sin is bold
To try, even where no hope is) ; I made promise,
But to secure myself, and withal sound
Th' affections of young Credulous unto Your virtuous daughter, told him he should meet
her,

Where I agreed to meet your chambermaid :
The blame must all be mine.

SIR T. 'Tis her deliverance.
She hath escap'd two plagues, a lustful fool.

MEAN. I dare not challenge her, I do confess,
As a reward due to my service ; and
If you deny her me, assure yourself
I'll never draw her from obedience.
I will not love her to procure her ruin,
And make m' affection prove her enemy.

SIR T. You speak most honestly : I never did .

Think ill of your intents, but always gave
 A testimony to your life as large As were your merits. But your fortunes are Unequal; there's the want.

MEAN. What's there defective
 Love shall supply. True, Master Credulous
 Is a rich man, but yet wants that which makes
 His riches useful, free discretion.
 He may be something in th' eye o' th' world;
 But let a knowing man, that can distinguish Between possessions and good parts, but view him,
 And prize impartially, he will be rated
 Only as chests and caskets, just according To what he holds. I value him as I Would an exchequer or a magazine.
 He is not virtuous, but well-stor'd: a thing
 Rather well-victuall'd than well-qualified;
 And if you please to cast your eye on me,
 Some moneys will call back my father's lands
 Out of his lime-twig fingers, and I shall Come forth as gay as he.

SIR T. I'll strive no longer,
 For fear I seem t' oppose felicity.
 If she'll give her consent, y' are one.

JANE. It is
 The voice of angels to me. I had thought Nothing in all the store of nature could
 Have added to that love wherewith I do
 Reverence that name, my father, till that you Spoke this.

SIR T. I know your former loves: grow up
 Into an aged pair, yet still seem young.
 May you stand fresh, as in your pictures, still,
 And only have the reverence of the aged.
 I thank you for your pains, Master Constable:
 You may dismiss your watch now.

SHAPE. [Disguised as a Constable.] A pox on't!
 That, after all this, ne'er a man to carry

To prison! Must poor tradesmen be brought out,
And nobody clapp'd up?

MEAN. That you mayn't want Employment, friends, take this, I pray, and drink
it.

SLICER. [Disguised.] Sir, when y' are cheated next, we are your servants.

[Exeunt all but SHAPE, HEARSAY, and SLICER.]

SCENE V.

SHAPE, SLICER, HEARSAY.

SHAPE. Lie thou there, watchman. How the knave that's look'd for
May often lurk under the officer!
Invention, I applaud thee.

HEAR. London air,
Methinks, begins to be too hot for us.

SLICER. There is no longer tarrying here: let's swear

Fidelity to one another, and
So resolve for New England.¹

HEAR. 'Tis but getting
A little pigeon-hole reformed ruff——

¹ This is intended to ridicule the Puritans of the times, who, on account of the severe censures of the Star Chamber, the greatness of the fines there, the rigorous proceedings to impose ceremonies, the suspending and silencing ministers for not reading in church "The Book of Sports," and other grievances, sold their estates, and settled in New England. The emigrations, on these accounts, at length became so general, that a proclamation was put forth in 1635 to stop those who had determined to follow their friends. It is remarkable that amongst those who were actually on shipboard, and prevented by the proclamation from proceeding on their voyage, were the patriot Hampden and his cousin Oliver Cromwell.

SLICER. Forcing our beards into th' orthodox bent—

SHAPE. Nosing a little treason 'gainst the king, Bark something at the bishops, and we shall
Be easily receiv'd.

HEAR. No fitter place.

They are good silly people; souls that will Be cheated without trouble. One eye is Put out with zeal, th' other with ignorance;
And yet they think they're eagles.

SHAPE. We are made
Just fit for that meridian. \ No good work's Allow'd there: faith—faith is that they call for,
And we will bring it 'em.

SLICER. What language speak they?

HEAR. English, and now and then a root or two Of Hebrew, which we'll learn of some Dutch skipper

That goes along with us this voyage. Now
We want but a good wind; the brethren's sighs
Must fill our sails; for what Old England won't Afford, New England will. You shall hear of us
By the next ship that comes for proselytes.
Each soil is not the good man's country only;
Nor is the lot his to be still at home:

*We'll claim a share, and prove that nature gave
This boon, as to the good, so to the knave.*

[Exeunt.]

THE EPILOGUE.

SHAPE. We have escap'd the law, but yet do fear
Something that's harder answer'd—your sharp ear.
O, for a present sleight now to beguile
That, and deceive you but of one good smile.
'Tis that must free us : th' Author dares not look
For that good fortune, to be sav'd by's book.
To leave this blessed soil is no great woe ;
Our grief's in leaving you, that make it so ;
For if you shall call in those beams you lent,
'Twould ev'n at home create a banishment.

THE LONDON CHANTICLEERS.

EDITION.

The London Chaunticleers. A Witty Comoedy, full of Various and Delightfull Mirth. Often Acted with Great applause, and never before Published. London, Printed for Simon Miller, at the Star in St. Pauls Church-yard. 1659. 4°.

This amusing and peculiar play has never hitherto been re-published from the original edition. It is a performance, as the title-page partly intimates, considerably older than the date of publication. Mr Halliwell ("Dictionary of Old Plays," 1860, p. 144) observes: "This piece is rather an interlude than a play; but it is curious, the characters being London criers.

"From a passage in the prologue we may perhaps infer that the production originally appeared during a visitation of the plague at London, and that it was first presented (the machinery required being simple enough) on some suburban or provincial stage. The metropolis was ravaged by pestilence in 1636, which is a not unlikely date for the composition and original presentation of "The London Chanticleers."

The allusions to old usages, with the mention of many well-known ballads, and of some known no longer, contribute to give the present piece an interest and value of its own.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

HEATH, a broom-man.

BRISTLE, a brush-man.

DITTY, a ballad-man.

BUDGET, a tinker.

GUM, a tooth-drawer.

WELCOME, a host.

BUNG, a tapster.

FENNETING, an apple-wench.

CURDS, a fresh cheese and cream woman.

PROLOGUE.

THE style that banish'd Ovid and his book,
And, spite of's laurel made him thunderstrook,
Is banish'd from this scene by us ; and here
Cato may come into the theatre.
At our love-tricks none need their eyelids crush,
Chaste vestals may look on without a blush :
Our cheats do take, if they but time beguile,
And all our plot is but to make you smile.
You're welcome then to London, which our show,
Since you mayn't go to that, has brought to you.
Pardon, if we offend you with our noise,
'Tis but an echo of their clamorous voice.

THE LONDON CHANTICLEERS.

SCENE 1.

Enter HEATH, a broom-man.

HEATH. Brooms, maids, brooms ! Old boots or shoes ! Come, buy my brooms !

*You maidens that do cleanse the door,
And make a looking-glass o' th' floor,
That every night prepare the ground,
For Oberon to dance a round,
And do expect Queen Mab for you
Should drop a tester in a shoe,
And would sleep without pinching, come
Quickly to me, and buy a broom,
That will effect the thing you mean ;
'Tis a new broom, and will sweep clean.*

Come, buy my broom, maids ! Maids, did I say ? Sure, there are none i' th' city ; or, if there be any, they have forsworn my custom. All the brooms I have sold to-day would not sweep half the ground I have gone ; and the money I have got will scarce buy ale enough to moisten my mouth after one cry. Sure, all the city are turned dustmen, and the whole corporation are of the company of Grobians. Women sweep their houses with their long coats, and men their shops with their scrubbed beards.

There's no use of a besom now but to make rods of and sweep the children's backsides. 'Tis better killing men for eightpence a day, or hanging of 'em for thirteepence halfpenny apiece, than follow this poor and idle life; 'tis easier canting out, A piece of broken bread for a poor man, than singing, Brooms, maids, brooms: come, buy my brooms! I should e'en go hang myself now if I were worth a halter; but who will spend a groat on't, when he may be hanged at free cost? I'll go rob the sheriff, and not leave him enough to hire an executioner for me; steal the judge's gown, that he may not come to the assizes, and poison the jury, that they may not bring me in guilty.

Enter BRISTLE.

BRIS. Buy a save-all, buy a save-all; never more need. Come, buy a save-all! Buy a comb-brush or a pot-brush; buy a flint, or a steel, or a tinder-box.

HEATH. O Bristle, welcome! I perceive by thy merry note, that there's music in thy pocket. What, dost jingle?

BRIS. And I perceive by thy heavy countenance thy purse is light. Dost want coin?

HEATH. Dost thou doubt that? Dost thou not see I'm sober? Do I swear or kick for asking, if I want money?

BRIS. These are infallible signs indeed that thou dost want it.

HEATH. I have been up this two hours, and have not visited one alehouse yet.

BRIS. Nay, I am fully satisfied; but canst thou want money whilst thou hast fingers to tell it?

HEATH. Why, wouldst have 'um made of load-stones, to draw all that comes nigh 'em?

BRIS. Canst thou be poor, and have a tongue

Nay, then, 'tis pity but thou shouldst be sent to the Mint thyself, and be stamped into farthings, to be bestowed on beggars ! I'd dig to the Antipodes with my nails, but I'd find a mine ; and, like the cripple, run up Paul's steeple, but I'd get the silver cock.

HEATH. He had no legs to break if he had fallen, nor weight enough to crack his neck.

BRIS. Nor thou wit enough to be hanged. Thou hadst rather be starved than break open a cupboard, and die a good poor man or an honest beggar, than a rich thief or a gentleman rogue. Thou thinkest it more commendable, I warrant, to be carried in a chair from constable to constable, with a warrant from the churchwardens ; that thou art a poor man, and desirest their charity ; that thou art willing to work, but art almost starved ; hast half a dozen children, the eldest not above three years old, their mother having been dead this eight year ; and such pitiful complaints, with as many tears as would drown all the victuals thou eat'st, than ride a mile or two in a cart, with the sheriff attending on thee ! Thou believ'st that more may be gotten with a Good your (nonsense) Worship to every Jack than a Sirrah, deliver your purse to the best lord i' th' land ; and all this grounded upon that precise axiom, " A little with honesty is better than a great deal with knavery."

HEATH. Thanks, good Bristle, for thy counsel. I mean to be as perfect a pickpocket, as good as ever nipped the judge's bung while he was condemning him. Look to thy purse, Bristle, lest I practise on thee first. The fairies can't creep through a lesser keyhole than I. O, for a dead man's hand now ! 'Tis as good as poppy-seed to charm the house asleep ; it makes 'um as senseless as itself. Come, shall we turn knight-errants ? Name the first adventure. Dost thou know no enchanted castle, no golden ladies in distress or imprisoned by some old giant usurer ?

BRIS. Stay a little, Heath. I have a design in my head that will outgo Don Quixote or Palmerin as far as they did the giants they overcame—a trick that shall load us with money without any fear of th' cart.

HEATH. I'll be thy squire, though I fare no better than Sanch Pancha, and am tossed in a blanket.

BRIS. Come, follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter NANCY CURDWELL.

CURD. I have fresh cheese and cream ; I have fresh cheese and cream. Heigho ! But one suitor yet ? Must my sheets lie smooth till I am wrinkled ? Nay, then, I see beauty is not a cable-rope, to draw men's hearts after it, nor our mouths a mouse-trap, our tongues a lure, and lips a gin ; our hairs are not fishing-lines, nor our noses hooks. These gudgeons will not swallow the bait that hangs there. Nay, we cannot catch these mer-men, though our smocks were made of network, and we hung all o'er with looking-glasses. No, no ; I see, when these buzzards look after mates, they wink and choose. I think I must have my nose turned into a bill, and write upon it, Here is a house to be let. I am but six-and-twenty years old, and that's young enough to play with a baby. O, how like the picture of Charity should I look with two sucklings at my breast !

Enter BUDGET, a tinker.

BUD. Have you any work for a tinker ? Old brass, old pots, old kettles. I'll mend them all with a tara-tink, and never hurt your metal.—Here she is! Methinks she looks very smug upon me. Now to my 'ration. Most beautiful, fair and virtuous mistress, whose face is a burning-glass, and hath set me on fire. My sugar-plum and stewed-prune lady, whose fine sharp nose, like Cupid's darts, hath pricked me to the heart! Whiter than the curds thou sell'st, softer than the silk thou wearest, milder than the four-shilling beer thou drink'st! Venus, I believe, was a fresh cheese and cream woman, and, letting fall her pail, made the Milky Way, but yet came as far short of thee, my sweet, honey Nancy, as whey of butter-milk or skimmed milk of cream! O, that I were a worm to crawl on that face of: thine, or a flea——

CURD. He'd bite me, sure?

BUD. To slip about thy neck. Do not, I pray, tread on me with the foot of disdain, lest thou crush my heart as flat as a pancake.

CURDS. Pray, leave off your suit; I have no mind to marry;
I'll always live a virgin.

BUD. What, and lead apes in hell? What pity would it be to see you chained to a monkey!

CURDS. Or tied to you! [Aside.]

BUD. O, do not frown! Each wrinkle is a grave to me, and angry look a death's-head. Do not despise me 'cause I am black and you so white; the moon wears beauty-spots, and the fairest ladies black patches. White petticoats are wrought with black silk, and we put black plums into white puddings.

CURD. But black-and-white ribbons are worn only at burials, never at weddings: and I would be loth my wedding-sheet should be my shroud, and my bed a grave. Therefore, pray, be gone, and come when I send for you.

BUD. Sweet sugar-candy mistress, grant me one thing before you go.

CURD. What is't?

BUD. Give me leave to vouchsafe one kiss on those sweet silken parchment-lips.

CURD. Take your farewell, you shall never kiss 'um again. [Kisses her, and blacks her mouth.

BUD. Thanks, pudding-pie Nancy. [Exit.

CURD. Faugh, how he stinks of smoke! Does he think I'll be his trull, and that he shall smutch my face thus with his charcoal nose? No, I'll see him burnt first! Out upon him, beggar, burnt-arse rogue, devil-tinker! I am afraid his ugly looks have soured my cream, and made all my cheese run to whey; but if he come to me again thus, I'll make him blue as well as black.

Enter HANNA JENNITING.

JEN. Come, buy my pearmains, curious John apples, dainty pippins; come, who buys? who buys?

CURD. O sister Hanna, I wanted you just now; here was a tinker had like to have run away with me in his budget; a copper-nosed rogue, brazen-faced rascal!

JEN. But you were even with him? Nay, you are a whisket! I' faith, I see beards are infectious as well as scabbed lips. Salute your apron, and 'twill tell you who you kissed last.

CURD. He has printed a kiss indeed.

JEN. Was he a suitor? Did he woo you with posnets and skilletts, and promise you a kettle next Bartholomew fair? And how did you answer him? Did you say, Fly, brass, the devil's a tinker? Or more mildly tell him you could not settle your affections on him? But come, look sprightly. Somebody will stare so long upon the bright sun of our beauties, till they are blinded with beams. Thou knowest, when my mother died, she left us, beside some stringed pence and a granam's groat, seven suitors, whereof all have forsaken us but Graftwell the gardener; and my mother indeed used to say that I was born to be a gardener's wife, as soon as ever I was taken out of her parsley-bed. But 'tis no matter; let 'um go.

CURD. But I wonder, Hanna, that you, having been an apple-woman so long, cannot get a customer for yourself. You might go off for a queen-apple! Come along; the next chapman shall have us at an easy rate. I have fresh cheese, &c.

JEN. Come, buy pippins. [Exeunt crying.]

SCENE III.

Enter DITTY, a ballad-man.

DITTY. Come, new books, new books; newly printed and newly come forth! All sorts of ballads and pleasant books! The Famous History of Tom Thumb and Unfortunate Jack,¹ A Hundred Godly Lessons, and Alas, poor Scholar, whither wilt thou go? The second part of Mother Shipton's Prophecies, newly made by a gentleman of good quality, foretelling what was done four hundred years ago, and A Pleasant Ballad of a bloody fight seen i' th' air, which, the astrologers say, portends scarcity of fowl this year. [Sings a ballad.]

Enter BUDGET.

BUD. Have you the Ballad of the Unfortunate Lover?

¹ See Hazlitt's "Handbook," art. Jack. Only a second part is at present known.

DITTY. No, but I have George of Green or Chivy Chase, Collins and the Devil, or Room for Cuckolds; I have anything but that.

BUD. Have you the Coy Maid?

DITTY. I sold that just now; but I have the Ballad of the London 'Prentice, Guy of Warwick, or The Beggar of Bethnal Green.

BUD. What loves-ongs have you? I would have a wooing ballad.

DITTY. I have twenty of them. Look you, here's one, and although I say it myself, as good a one as ever trod upon shoe-leather.

BUD. What is't? Good Ditty, let me hear it.

DITTY. The honest Milkmaid, or I must not wrong my Dame.

BUD. Have you never a one called The honest Fresh Cheese and Cream Woman?

DITTY. I do not remember that; but here is another, you shall hear me sing it.

*Once did I love a maiden fair,
Down derry, down, down, down, down derry;
With silver locks and golden hair,
Down derry, &c. ;
Her cheeks were like the rose so sweet,
Down derry, &c. ;
Like marble pillars were her feet,
Down derry, &c.*

How like you this? 'Tis a rare tune, and a very pleasant song.

BUD. I like the song well; but I would have a picture upon it like me.

DITTY. Look you here; here's one as like you as if it had been spit out of your mouth; your nose, eye, lip, chin; sure, they printed it with your face! and the most sweetest ballad that ever I sung—

*My love and I to medley,
 Upon a time would go:
 The boatmen they stood ready,
 My love and I to row;
 Where we had cakes and prunes,
 And many fine things mo;
 But now, alas, she has left me:
 Fa la, fa lero, lo!*

BUD. This is the ballad I'll have. Come, Ditty, thou shalt teach me to sing it, and I'll pay thee at the next good house. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Enter BRISTLE, like a shoemaker, with HEATH, like a butcher.

HEATH. Slaughter-calf do you say my name shall be?

BRIS. Ay, ay, and mine Vamp.

HEATH. And how do I look now? Like one that was begotten under a butcher's stall, I warrant, and born in a slaughter-house? I know there's never a Kill-cow i' th' city becomes a woollen apron better than I do.

BRIS. Liker a calf than butcher; yet thy sheep's head will be some token thou cam'st from the Butch Row. Have a care thou dost not forget thyself, and talk of brooms instead of fly-flops, and old boots and shoes instead of calves' skins!

HEATH. I am as artificial at the trade as the master o' th' company. I could sell Jupiter, were he a bull again. I am perfectly changed; I never knew Heath the broom-man or the price of a besom, never trafficked with maids o' th' kitchen, or shopboys for old boots and shoes.

BRIS. Nor I for new, for all I'm a shoemaker. But to the design. Stand here; this is the road she walks; if thou fail'st, may thy woollen apron be spun into halters to hang thee in, and a stall be thy gibbet. [Exit.]

HEATH. If I don't act my part well, may I be a changeling indeed, and be begged for the city fool. If she be coy, and by her obstinacy hinder our plot, I'll quarter her out and sell her for cow-beef, make petticoats of her fingers and trotters of her feet.

Enter CURDWELL.

CURD. I have fresh cheese and cream!

HEATH. Harmonious voice! The Witney singers are but chattering magpies to this melodious nightingale, and the tabor and pipe but as the scraping on a brass pan to this organ; sure, this is the beauty that I must court. If Cupid be not propitious now, I'll cut my brooms into rods, and whip the peevish boy. Lady (for so your beauty styles you), to whom the snow and swan are black, whether thou art a goddess, and come down to punish men, and make them die with love, or a mortal which excellest all goddesses, pity a wounded heart, which can receive no ease from anything but those eyes from whom it did receive its wounds. There's no nectar or ambrosia but what thy pail affords; the moon would willingly be that the Welshmen wish it, so thou wouldst give it room amongst thy cheeses. Be not unkind, sweet lady; one cruel look will make this place my slaughter-house, and thee the butcher's butcher.

CURD. I dare not trust you, for all your fair words; men of your profession make it a trade to cheat us.

HEATH. I'll be as faithful as thou art fair, and stick as close unto thee as my shirt does to my back on a sweltry sweating day. Come, thou shalt yield, and by yielding conquer me.

CURD. You set upon weak women with your strong compliments, and overcome them, whether they will or no. [He moves.]

HEATH. Move forward; we'll be contracted at the next alehouse, be married to-morrow, and have half a dozen children the next day. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

Enter WELCOME, a host.

WEL. Sure, I have slept myself into an owl, and mistake night for day? Can light dawn, and none see the way to my house for a morning's draught? No groats due? Did all my mad lads go sober to bed last night? Such a crime forfeits the city charter. What ho! speak here, sirrah Bung.

Enter BUNG.

BUNG. By and by! Who calls? O master, good morrow to you.

WEL. Why, it is day with thee too, Bung, and I no owl. Speak, prythee; how long is't since thou couldst grope the tap out?

BUNG. O sir, this two hours. I have cut two dozen of toasts, broached a new barrel of ale, washed all the cups and flagons, made a fire i' th' George,¹ drained all the beer out of th' Half-Moon the company left o' the floor last night, wiped down all the tables, and have swept every room. The sun has been up this hour almost.

¹ It is well known that in our old inns the various rooms had separate names.

WEL. Ay, there's an honest soaker; the old blade swills himself i' th' sea all night, and quaffs from th' earth all day, and that makes him have such a ruby face. But what, no customers yet?

BUNG. Not one, sir; our old charwoman, Mary, has not called for her morning's draught yet—she that's the tub for all men's snuffs, and devours me more tappings than would serve to make strong waters for an army.

WEL. Sure, all the beer that was drunk yesterday had poppy in't instead of malt; and people are not yet awake, or else they mistake my house for a prison, and my old lattice for grates. Come, Bung, we'll give ourselves handsel; go, fill's a lusty pot of ale. [Exit BUNG.] This is a precious varlet, and has tricks enou' to furnish all the tapsters between Charing Cross and Fleet Bridge. The sleights of nicking and frothing he scorns as too common, but supplies that defect with little jugs and great glasses, and where he fears a dissolution, brings up his flagon, begins the king's health, and with that decoy draws on another dozen or two, till the whole royal progeny is gone over. He wished it once as numerous as old Priam's was, and another time had like to have been hanged for praying treason, that there were a hundred kings i' th' land, that men might be forced to drink all their healths for fear of displeasing any.

Re-enter BUNG.

BUNG. Here, sir, here's a cup of stinging liquor; it is so thick that you may slice it, and came drivelling out as if the loving vessel had been loth to part with it.

WEL. How? 'tis cold; the rogue has put ice into't instead of toast, or else one of's hundred leger wafers the baker dried for him t'other day in's oven, after his bread was drawn, for the yeast of two barrels. [Aside.] You rascal, cheat your master?

BUNG. Cry you mercy, good sir; I protest I had forgot who 'twas for, and popped it in before I was aware; but I'll air it for you instantly, if you please.

WEL. No, no, I'll warm't myself, and it shall warm me. Come, here's to all good swallows! So, so, one cup of ale will shroud one better from the cold than all the furs in Russia.

WITHIN. Tapster, where are you? Show's'a room here.

BUNG. Anon, anon, sir. You are welcome, gentlemen. Please you, walk into th' George; there's a good fire, and no company. [Exit.]

WEL. To see what luck a handsel will procure! No sooner the cup out of my mouth but another called for! It seems it stayed at me all this while; a dry, shabby host is more absurd than a dumb Exchange. These are some boon fellows, I know; the rogue is so perfect in his lerry.¹ Ditty and's comrades, perhaps; the rascal can never sing well till he has wetted his whistle at my house. He made me set up the sign o' th' Flying Horse for a Pegasus. Budget the tinker, too, is as good at cracking a pot as any, and Bristle the merriest, cunningest whoreson; he sells his traps twopence dearer, only by giving rules how to bait them—for a Dutch mouse, with butter forsooth, or bacon; and then for a Welsh one, toasted cheese is the best.

Enter BUNG again.

BUNG. The gentlemen within desire your company.

¹ The usual burden of a song.

WEL. What are they ?

BUNG. The four churchwardens o' th' parish, that never exceed halfpence apiece at a morning's draught, must have a flagon instead of a black-pot, and fire, toast and nutmeg over and above ; nay, sometimes a breakfast too.

WEL. And when they mount so high as a penny, drink at Widow Grunt's—she that has an eleven children, and say they are prodigal, merely out of charity to the poor orphan pigs ; but at th' hall, on a court-day, can be as drunk as so many tinkers at Banbury, or nurses at a christ'ning ! Pox on 'um, tell 'um I am busy with other company.

BUNG. Nay, sir, they protest they'll have your jug in.¹

WEL. They shall have me too then, and for once I'll obey their summons ; but let 'um expect to pay for all they call for, and therefore for me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

Enter GUM, a tooth-drawer.

GUM. Have you any corns upon your feet or toes ? any teeth to draw ? O, for a flood now or a whole year of rain, that every step may be up to the ankles in water, and cover every toe with a corn ! May the shoemakers make all their shoes too strait, that they may pinch the sore-toed miser, and at every tread put him in mind of work for the corn-cutter ! May the toothache be an hereditary disease, and prove infectious, or so many aldermen be turned into marble that the whole city may get rotten teeth with eating of sugar-plums and sweetmeats at their funerals.

¹ This points to the custom of the landlord, when he joined any guests at a table, contributing a free jug or bottle.

Enter DITTY.

DITTY. The Seven Wise Men of Gotam, a Hundred Merry Tales, Scoggin's Jest, or A Book of Prayers and Graces for Young Children.

GUM. What news-books, Ditty? Any proclamations that they must forfeit all their toes that have no corns, or that they must never eat good victuals that have not the toothache? Are red mufflers and slashed shoes come into fashion? They are as sure signs of the ache of teeth and toes as a red lattice of an alehouse.

DITTY. No, truly, Master Gum, I have none of these books, but I have as good. I have very strange news from beyond seas.

GUM. What is't? Do they want corn-cutters or tooth-drawers? prythee, let's hear it.

DITTY. The King of Morocco has got the black jaundice, and the Duke of Westphalia is sick of the swine-pox with eating bacon; the Moors increase daily, and the King of Cyprus mourns for the Duke of Saxony, that is dead of the stone; and Presbyter John is advanced to Zealand; the sea ebbs and flows but twice in four-and-twenty hours, and the moon has changed but once the last month.

GUM. Hold, hold! here's enough to tire the dove's neck, before she gets home.

Enter BUDGET.

BUD. Well, I must strike whilst the iron's hot. Good Vulcan, be assistant, and grant that some spark of love may be kindled in her heart, and that I may with my compliments, as with the bellows of rhetoric, blow the coals of goodwill, and with my forked arguments stir up the fire of affection in her! I have been filing my nose and anvil down my chin this two days, and yet just now there was scarce room enough for her sweet lips and mine to meet. She calls me Vulcan and Cyclops, and says I shall be hanged up for the sign of the Black Boy. But 'tis no matter. It may be, when she calls me Vulcan, she would have me make her my Venus!

DITTY. Who is this trough that he is about to run away with?

BUD. Well, I'll try both ways.

DITTY. How now, Budget? Can you sing your ballad yet? Come, are you perfect?

BUD. Not yet, Ditty; but is't to the tune o' th' Bleeding Heart, do you say?

DITTY. Ay, ay; but what makes you so pale, Budget? There's a cup of ale at mine host Welcome's will make your nose of another colour.

BUD. O Ditty, there is a nail knocked into my heart! It pricks, it pricks.

GUM. Why, if you can't wrench it out, we'll send for a smith.

DITTY. Has Cupid played the joiner with you, then? Who is't he has fastened to your heart with that nail? What metal is she made of, that you cannot hammer her?

BUD. It is the city's beauty!

DITTY. The city's beauty? who's that? One of my lord major's spaniels?

GUM. I knew a bitch of that name was a very pretty dog, and would fetch and carry as nimbly as any porter in the town.

BUD. What, villain, do you make a puppy of me! I'll kick you into glove-dogs, you mongrels, hell-hounds, whelps!

[Kicks them.]

DITTY. Hold, good Budget, a jest is but a jest; I spoke but in jest.

GUM. Nor I, indeed, Master Budget.

BUD. Then I kicked you but in jest.

GUM. Ay, ay, sir, we take it so ; you must think, if it had been in earnest, though it had been the best man i' th' land, he had kicked his last.

BUD. Had he so, slave ?

GUM. Yes, when he had done kicking.

DIT. Good Budget, be pacified, and we'll recompense the injury we have done you with our forwardness to promote your desires and translation out of the circle of love into the wedding-ring.

BUD. Thanks, kind Ditty ; walk along with me, and I will show thee the sweet empress of my heart. I am appeased. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.

Enter BRISTLE and JENNING.

BRIS. Yes, truly, I am one of the gentle craft, though I have got somewhat of the tailor's trade too ; some hangers on—fellow-travellers, that I cannot be rid of, though, are still upon my back : they put me to foul shifts sometimes.

JEN. Then you know Crispianus ?

BRIS. Yes, he is a saint amongst us, of whose votaries I am one, that each Monday morning liquor his altar with ale, and grease it with bacon.

JEN. So you sacrifice the hog to get the bristles !

BRIS. She knows my name, sure. [Aside.] But 'tis no matter for him. Hereafter I'll know no saints but thee ; be not therefore unkind, but look with a favourable aspect on him that can expect no bad influence from so benign a star.

JEN. You do but flatter me ; I am not so good a one as you make me.

BRIS. Now, by Jove, thou art fairer than Calisto

(and more like a bear), more divine than Cassiopeia! Do but consider that every sow has a ring, and will not you have one?

JEN. Well, Vamp, you know how to take the length of women's feet.

BRIS. Come, my Jenniting, we will have twins every year.

JEN. Such as shall be christened at Saint James' tide, I warrant!

BRIS. No, no; two boys and so many wenches, that we will furnish the whole city with herb-women and costermongers of our own progeny; there shall not be an apple-wife in the whole country but she shall be ingrafted into some branch of our family: not a day in the whole year shall pass but some tree of our stock shall be set, till we have enough to plant a wilderness and people it. Go, pack up thy treasure; the time flies too fast, but we'll outstrip it. To-night we'll be at a place some ten miles off, where a house ready-furnished waits for thee, with all things necessary for the celebration of our nuptials. I'll fit thee with a pair of shoes; let's see thy foot. It is of the eighteens; thou shalt have a strapping pair. Make haste.

JEN. Thanks, kind Vamp; all that I have is thine. [Exit.

BRIS. I hope so, or else my plot fails me: if Heath speed with Nancy Curds as well as I have with Hanna Jenniting, we shall make quick work with 'um; we shall fledge ourselves before we fly. Let them husband what we leave 'um as well as they can. [Exit.

SCENE VIII.

Enter HEATH and CURDS.

HEATH. Yes, it is a very neat house; 'tis at the sign of the Bull; 'tis newly covered with calves'-skins, and paved with knuckle-bones. Thou shalt not deny me; we'll be there to-night; and 'tis but three hours' journey. Let me have thy bundles of necessaries an hour hence, and I'll see 'um safe sent before. Thou shalt be the lady o' th' town.

CURDS. I have been one in my days, when we kept the Whitson ale, where we danced *The Building of London Bridge upon wool-packs*¹ and *The Hay*² upon a grass-plat, and when we were aweary with dancing hard, we always went to the cushion dance.

HEATH. Ay, we'll have dancing at our wedding too, when the cups of canary have made our heads frisk. O, how we shall foot it, when we can scarce stand, and caper when we are cut in the leg! The first year shall be a leap-year with us.

CURDS. What shall we have at our wedding dinner? We'll be sure of a plum-pudding, that shall be the very flower of the feast.

HEATH. Then a leg of beef shall walk round the table, like a city captain with a target of lamb before it: a snipe, with his long bill, shall be a serjeant, and a capon carry the drumsticks. Thou shalt be lady-general, and pick out the choicest of every dish for thy life-guard.

¹ This saying arose from the duty on wool, levied to defray the cost of rebuilding the bridge (Knight's "London," i. 79). Nancy alludes to a dance so called.

² A well-known and often-quoted dance. See the poem by N. Breton, in "England's Helicon," 1600, repr. Collier, p. 222.

CURDS. I'll pay them to the full. [Aside.
 HEATH. Till anon good-bye. [Exit HEATH.]

Enter BUDGET, DITTY, GUM.

DITTY. Pox o' thy ugly face! ca'st not sing but thou must cry too? Look, there she is; good Gum, hold my shop a little.

BUD. And mine too.

GUM. Now do I look like one of the pillars in the Exchange. [Exit.

BUD. Sweet lady, smile on me

CURDS. [Aside.] Hissing adders!

BUD. *Now merrily:
 For if thou frown on me,
 Sure I shall die.*

BOTH. Sure I shall die, &c.

CURDS. Croaking toads.

BUD. *Thy eyes, like a cockatrice,
 Kill with a look:
 They shine like the sun,
 I'd swear on a book.*

CURDS. Away, screech-owls!

BOTH. I swear on a book, &c. [Exit CURDS.]

BUD. Stay, Ditty, she is deaf, and would not hear though Orpheus played, nor be moved though the stones and trees danced.

DITTY. Give me thy letter then—I'll run after her and deliver it myself.

BUD. Prythee, do, kind-hearted Ditty.

DITTY. O, what a nimble Cupid shall I be! Venus herself will mistake me for her boy.

BUD. I'll wait here till thou returnest.

[Exit DITTY.¹

¹ Although Budget promises to await Ditty's return, he appears to retire to the back of the stage.

SCENE IX.

Enter BRISTLE and HEATH.

BRIS. What, did she melt easily? Was she pliable?

HEATH. O, like cobbler's wax; she stuck to my fingers: I could hardly get her off, and had much ado to persuade her not to undo herself quite. She would have had me gone home and took all; nay, would have robbed her aunt too, but that I should cheat her sufficiently. This will be the best day's work I have done this many a year.

BRIS. And yet all my rhetoric could scarce persuade you to be wise.

HEATH. I am thy scholar, and thou shalt find I'll prove an apt one. If I am not as perfect at the art as thyself in a short time, may I never be made free, but always steal for others, and be hanged myself.

BRIS. Yet still thou owest thy learning unto me; if I had not been thy master, thou might'st have sat at home now with a cup of cold water and thy precious jewel, a contented mind, wishing thou hadst but money enough to pay a forfeit for being drunk, though thy empty pockets forced thee to be sober.

HEATH. Come, prythee, leave; I myself do now laugh at my former ignorance. Thou hast infused a new soul into me; thou hast played hocus-pocus with me, I think, and juggled Gusmond or country Tom's legerdemain into me. There's not such a change in all the Metamorphosis.

BRIS. And now thou hast¹ bargained with thy whey-faced wench, what hast thou gained by the project? nothing but wit.

¹ Old copy, hast thou.

HEATH. Yes, a silver bodkin and thimble, and as many curds as would serve the court ladies for a twelvemonth, besides the box laden with all the plate and household stuff that her pitchy fingers could stick to in six years' service, with which I believe she now waits for me at the appointed place. What we can't turn into money we will into ale, and drink it out. Mine host Welcome has a cup of blessed lull.¹

BRIS. Away, make haste, we'll empty his cellar to-night, and draw his barrels out into our hogs-head.

HEATH. I'll outfly the swift. [Exit HEATH.

BRIS. But scarce outgo an owl. This fellow will I so tutor, that he shall rob Mercury himself, surpass Prometheus, and steal the sun from heaven! Filch away Venus's box of beauty, and pawn it to ladies, not to be redeemed but by the golden apple that Paris gave her! Jupiter's thunder, too, and sell it to besieged towns for granadoes!

Enter JENNING with a bundle.

O, here comes my precious Hanna, never so lovely as now, when she brings a bundle along with her! That beauty-spot makes her look fair. Come, my sweeting; every minute was an age till thou camest. But why so wrinkled? Those looks do not become a bride.

JEN. Is there no danger of drowning? I am ready to sink every time I think of the water. I cannot choose but quake ever since I was in the ducking-stool.

BRIS. Never fear it. Thou shalt be Queen o' th' Thames, and command the waves; be crowned with water-cresses, and enrobed in watered grogerum. The Nymphs shall curl thy hair, and Syrens sing thy nuptials. The sea shall drink thy health, till it spews and purges again, and swell with pride, that it can carry thee.

¹ Ale.

JEN. These lines are strong enough to hold an anchor.

BRIS. Dolphins shall bring musicians on their backs, and spout out cans of beer beyond the conduits on the Mayor's-day.

JEN. We'll have a fish-dinner, too, and the Lady o' th' Lobster shall be Mistress o' th' Feast.

BRIS. Yes, yes; and Triton's trumpet shall echo up each mess, while we sound the bottom of our ocean cups, and drown god Neptune in a sea of wine! But let not your sister Nancy hear of it for your ears. She'll raise a tempest will shipwreck all our hopes; she'll storm louder than the winds. Meet me here two hours hence with all your tacklings. I'll see this bundle shall be safe. The ruddy sky promises a fair gale; if the winds fail us and blow enviously, we'll blast Æolus.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.

Enter DITTY.

DITTY. Well, if ever I carry love-letters again, may they make a love-letter of me; turn my skin to paper, my skull to an inkhorn, and make a pen of my nose; it will be excellent for a fast hand, for it runs continually, and is so moist that it will write without ink! Nay, if ever I thrust myself into wedding businesses again, may a piece of match be my bane; may the bridegroom wring my ears off, hang me in the bride's garter, or drown me in the sack posset ; and if he bury me, bestow this threadbare epitaph—

*Here lieth Tom Ditty under this stone,
That carried love-letters ; reader, go on,—
But stay ! wouldst thou know the cause of his death ?
Th' long-winded letter 'put him out of breath.*

The next epistle I carry for Budget, he shall carry himself ; I'll not be his post, to be her beating-block too. Pox on's kettledrum ! 'tis good for nothing but to call the moon out of an eclipse, and he'll serve for nought neither, but a chimney-sweeper's shadow, or bugbear to fright froward children. I'll have some revenge on him, and deliver him up into her hands. If she do not sufficiently punish him, I'll forgive him.

Enter BUDGET.

DITTY. O, here comes the chimney, the man of soot, the picture of smoke and cinders !

BUD. O Ditty ! I see by thy face there's ill news.

DITTY. Ay, pox on't ! I was set upon yonder by a company of women, and had like to have been scolded into a cripple for singing Room for Cuckolds t'other day.

BUD. But what said my Nancy ? Did she smile, and say that all her denials were maiden's nays ? Is she softened, and will she now let me taste her strawberry lips willingly ?

DITTY. Yes, and give you cream to 'um too. Why, she is almost mad for you, and has bespoke a place in Bedlam already. If you do not go quickly and recover her, she'll either be turned into a kettle with grief, or melt into bell-metal, that she may be made a posnet of. Nay, and desired me to tell you that if after her transformation she chance ever to come under your hands to be mended, she would desire you to use her gently, and that you should know which was she, she had provided in her will that H. L. may be set on her handle for Nancy Curdwell.

BUD. I will, I will; I'll mend her with sugar-nails and a Naples biscuit-hammer. But is there no way to persuade her to live still a woman? I would be loth to carry my wife at my back, and have one with three legs.

DITTY. If you make haste, you may chance to come before she is quite changed; you may save a leg, perhaps, or an arm of flesh yet; but I believe the most part of her is brass already.

BUD. Good Ditty, go along with me; if she be a pot before I come, I'll weep it full of tears, and then be boiled to death in't. [Exeunt.

SCENE XI.

Enter GUM with the Tinker's budget and Ballad-man's box.

Any old pots or kettles to mend? Will you buy my ballads? or have you any corns on your feet-toes? Nay, I am Jack-of-all-trades now. Three is a perfect number, and so many I have. Nay, Master Tinker, you kicked me to-day; but since you are so light of your heels, I'll make you walk after your budget before you have it. 'T shall be in trouble presently, not to be delivered without a fee. I'll drink as much ale on the kettle as will fill it; the rest o' th' tools shall go for jugs apiece; and then, Master Ditty, I will be merry with your ballads, too. They must be in lavender a little, and soak. If they will but yield me draughts apiece, I care not, and the box shall serve to score on. But stay, had I not better burn it, to bake the toasts and warm the ale? Hang't! 'tis but engaging the books twopence or a groat deeper, and have some three or four bundles of straws like faggots, and 'twill be a-la-mode.

Enter BRISTLE and HEATH with bundles. GUM retires.

BRIS. She'll say I am a pretty jewel to run away with her cabinet; but 'tis no matter. This box will make me flourish all the year long.

GUM. So, so; here are companions that will help drink the sea dry: mere gulfs or whirlpools, that suck in all that comes nigh 'um.

BRIS. Come, Heath, open thy treasury. What's the first pearl?

GUM. These ale-suckers, too, are a-going to liquor some prize that their lime-twig fingers have seized upon.

HEATH. A pair of silver-handled knives. These, I believe, she made when she lived with my Lady May'ress. Next, a pair of white gloves; these she had at the funeral of a dear friend, for whose sake she meant to be buried in 'um herself; and how would Cerberus take it, to see one come to hell with a dog-skin pair of gloves? A silken garter! This, I warrant it, she had at a wedding, and intended to bestow it on her own bridemaid. Then a pair of scissors——

GUM. Sure, these villains have robbed an haberdasher, and stole a box of small-ware. [Aside.]

HEATH sings.

*Come out to the light,
Than which thou'rt more bright:
This box thee no longer shall harbour.*

'Tis thou that hast made
 Me o' th' triple trade—
 A tailor, a sempster, a barber.
 With thee I will shave
 The barbarian slave,
 And trim up the youngsters of Poland,
 Make a jump of Aleppo,
 Of Friesland a[nd] Joppo,
 And a stately brave shirt of Holland.

GUM. [Coming forward.] Well sung of a wood-cock. Come, thou must go have thy pipe tuned at mine host Welcome's; thou art like the glass pipe, that will never whistle but when there's water in't.

HEATH. Ho, ho! What, furniture for a whole fair upon thy back at once? Dressed up just like the wooden boys on haberdashers' stalls.

BRIS. Three strings to thy bow at once? Sure, thou canst not break when thou hast such a triple cord to hold thee.

GUM. A single one, I believe, would spoil your drinking; 'twould tie up your guzzle.

BRIS. But how dar'st thou walk abroad before owl-light? Dost think there's no birds stirring still that will spy out these feathers? Come, off with thy box of poetry, the Muses' warehouse, Calliope's Cabinet. 'Tis ominous to have the string about thy neck. If thou art taken with 'um, thou may'st be condemned to make as many wry mouths as the squeaking owner did, when he last strained and vomited 'um out at Smithfield or Pye Corner.

GUM. O, there's no fear of that, though he that these call master had my neck in a slip. These are Ditty's, and these Budget's; they gave 'um me to hold a little; but I'll carry 'um to the Flying Horse, and change 'um for a cup of Helicon, which will in half an hour make me able to repay the paltry rhymes in heroic verse.

BRIS. Come, shall we join together? we three are able to sponge up all the ale i' th' city, and raise the price of malt.

GUM. A match; as far as these will go, I'm for you.

HEATH. And when they're gone, we'll drink our very shirts out, and then pawn ourselves too.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.

Enter JENNING and CURDS.

JEN. Was he a butcher, say you?

CURDS. Ay, and called me his pretty lamb and his sweetbread; told me he would meet me here two hours ago, and promised me mountains; but bid me I should not tell you on't.

JEN. They are mere rogues, very jugglers; they have cheated us both. Just so did the shoemaker do to me.

CURDS. He has got my box of milled sixpences and Harry groats: the gilded scissors that were given me for a New Year's gift, and my bodkin and thimble.

JEN. I would they might both feed upon nothing but rotten apples, and be choked with pears!

CURDS. Or a piece of clout be left in the next fresh cheese they eat, and strangle 'um; or a favourable spider drop into the cream, and drown himself, that he may poison them.

Enter DITTY and BUDGET.

DITTY. 'Slife, lose [not] this opportunity; there she is; on, I say, and I'll be your second. I warrant she had been dead before this time, but that she smelt your breath hard by, or else knew by sympathy that you were coming.

BUD. Did the letter work so strangely on her, are you sure? I would not willingly venture my lips for a kiss, or my eyes for a look.

DITTY. Why, I tell thee she was so nigh a dissolution when I left her, that I thought to have found her in a sand-box, or begged by some vintner to keep bottled wine in, before I could return.

BUD. Well, I'll try, though she squeeze me into verjuice, and stamp my bones into small coal, that they may be twice burnt. [Advances.] O my honeycomb, milksop Nancy, whiter than the powder of chalk, and (like it) able to scour off the dirt of sullied drabs, and paint them with a brightness as glustering as thy own.

CURDS. Out, you sooty goblin, besmeared dolt! dost think I'll couple with a negro, to bring forth magpies, half white and half black? Take me for a bee, to knit at the sound of a brass kettle or frying-pan? Bundle of charcoal, furred crock, dost think I'll hang in thy pot-hook arm? Hence, or I'll beat thee worse than the Bridewell crew does hemp!

DITTY. Ay, ay, read him the same lesson you conned me!

BUD. Sweet Mistress Curds, be not so sour. Good Ditty, stop her mouth.

DITTY. Hold, hold, Nancy! He thought all women like pots of ale, and that tinkers might call for 'um as freely as the finest customer; this crab-tree lecture will teach him better manners hereafter.

JEN. Ay, sister, do not foul your mouth any more with the checker-faced scullion; let him go.

DITTY. Com^e, then, and shake hands; we'll fine him for's sauciness, and his ransom shall be half a dozen at mine host Welcome's. Come, come, you shall be friends, and I'll perfect the reconciliation with a song.

BUD. Half a dozen! We'll score out all the chalk i' th' house, and make the tapster fetch one o' th' city clerks to sum up the reckoning.

JEN. Come, sister, let's go drink sorrows dry; and a woman's anger should be like jack-weights—quickly up and quickly down. [Exeunt.

SCENE XIII.

Enter WELCOME.

WEL. Ay, ay, 'tis the rich face that keeps us from poverty. If the tailor's countenance were in fashion now, and all that had fiery faces were counted comets, what a decay would there be amongst our houses of good fellowship. How our cans would rot and jugs grow musty for want of use! I would the whole city were jugs and cans, that they might never be in good case but when they're full of good liquor. I fear this will be a bad year for all of our profession; salt meats are grown out of fashion, and Lent will be forgotten this year, and, for aught I know, the next Papist that's drunk may make the people condemn it for superstition because he uses it. Forbid, thou who ever art patron of good fellowship!

Enter BUNG.

BUNG. [To some one within.] I'll be with you presently. Master, can you give me a groat and sixpence for a twopence.

WEL. Who is't for?

BUNG. For a couple of strangers i' th' King's Head; they have sat preaching this two hours over two cans, and called me rogue and rascal for not giving attendance, and setting a chamber-pot for 'um. They've twopence to pay.

WEL. Then thou'dst have me give 'um eightpence to be gone, ha!

BUNG. A groat and twopence for a sixpence, I mean.

WEL. There 'tis; go, be nimble. [Exit BUNG.] We have had but small takings to-day; men have got the squincy or stopping of the throat, I think—they drink so slowly. May it turn to the dropsy, that they may never be weary of drinking, but that every draught may but make room for two more! 'Twill never be a good world while there's any but Welsh taverns, such as sell nothing but ale and tobacco; these French and Spanish ones will be the undoing of us all; men are grown such dottrels, that they had rather give five or six shillings to be drunk, like the Spaniard, with canary, or the Frenchman, with claret, than so many pence to be foxed with their own native beer.

Enter BUNG.

BUNG. O master, master, yonder's Ditty and Budget come in with two doxies! Ditty swears he'll have one of 'um, though she cuckold him the first night, and clap a pair of horns upon his head, that will confine him to his chamber till rutting-time come, and he shed 'um.

WEL. Who are they which they're enamoured so with?

BUNG. The one's Nancy Curds and the other Hanna Jenniting; Ditty and Jenniting are agreed already; now, if you'll go promote Budget's suit, and make a conclusion between him and Curds, the wedding will be kept at our house, and we shall, besides the getting by the victuals, put off the barrel of sour beer by and by. [Exit.

WEL. Well said, Bung : the crafti'st knave alive ! I should be glad to see both Budget and Ditty in the way of multiplying ; all their progeny cannot choose but be friends to the black pot, and will be notable tipplers, I warrant 'um, as soon as they come to the sucking-bottle. I'll go myself and contract 'um. [Exit.

SCENE XIV.

Enter BRISTLE, HEATH, GUM.

BRIS. Pox o' the ugly baboon ! she has got a face like a Bartholomew Fair baby, and a mouth like the whale that swallowed a whole fleet. Her fingers are rolling-pins, and her arms coal-staves ! Hang her, what should women do with money, or anything that's good ?

HEATH. You say true. If we had let 'um alone, I warrant these boxes had been kept till they were mouldy, visited but once a quarter, and at last bequeathed by will and testament to some silly sober well-wisher of hers in her lifetime.

BRIS. One that never drank above four-shilling beer but once at a christening, and then had like to have got a red nose by it, cannot distinguish between a jug and a flagon, never was in an ale-house, knows not what a bush means, nor ever spent above twopence in his life, and that was upon a prayer-book.

GUM. Your tongues, methinks, run very glib ; I wonder they do not screek for want of liquor. What, tapster ? attendance here.

BUNG. Anon, anon, sir ; I have it in my hand.

Enter TAPSTER.

TAP. You're welcome, gentlemen ; here's a cup of the best ale in London.

BRIS. How? gentlemen? untutored slave, saucy villain! Gentlemen? why, sirrah, do I look like a gentleman? I scorn thy terms, and let this kick put thee in mind of better language.

BUNG. Cry you mercy, I mistook you indeed.

HEATH. Sirrah, we'll make you know who you mistake ; call one of your master's best customers gentleman!

BUNG. [To some one outside.] Anon, anon, sir ; I'll be with you presently.

BRIS. Sirrah, bid your master come in.

[Exit TAPSTER.

GUM. Come, here's a round to the first inventor of the famous art of drinking.

BRIS. No, no ; to the first finder out of the noble art of brewing ; for we should be forced to drink water else.

HEATH. To neither ; but to the first most commendable alehouse-keeper that sold three cans for twopence ; he is the chief benefactor we have. Come, three cans to his health!

GUM, BRIS. A match!

Enter WELCOME, DITTY, BUDGET, JENNITING, CURDS.

WEL. Set you merry, my merry, merry lads ; what, do the cans dance nimbly?

HEATH. Yes, but we want a pipe or two ; good mine host, let's have some whiff.

WEL. Here's a musician ; honest Ditty and Budget too : if they do not make up the consort, they are very much out of tune.

DITTY. O Gum, have we found you out? my box, you slave!

BUD. And my budget !

WEL. Come, set about, set about, my boon companions.

BRIS. A devil on your snout ! oatmeal face and tallow-chops, how came you hither with a pox, trow ?

HEATH. Look here, Bristle, how like shorn sheep they look. Where shall we run ? they have cast me into a fit o' th' shaking palsy.

BRIS. Come, we'll outface 'um.

WEL. Come, sit down, my jovial boys, and roar. This night we'll suck up all the dew.

Enter BUNG, with tobacco.

BUNG. Here's a pipe o' th' best tobacco that Christendom affords ; it grew under the King of Spain's own window. [To other customers.] By and by ; what do you want, sirs ? [Exit.]

DITTY. And I warrant he used to fling pisspots out on't.

WEL. We'll drink ourselves into fish, and eat ourselves into cormorants ; we'll not fast, though it be an eve to a surfeiting gawdy day.

HEATH. Is't an eve, say you ? pray, what holiday is to-morrow ?

WEL. Budget's and Ditty's nuptials. Drink freely ; all is paid already, and you are Ditty's guests to-night as well as mine. There sit the brides. You shall not leave my house to-night, that I may be sure of you to-morrow morning at the solemnities ; be merry then, and free. I'll pardon you your groats to-morrow, and none shall forfeit but he that is not drunk. [Exit WELCOME.]

HEATH, BRIS. GUM. Joy to the brides and bridegrooms !

DITTY. Gentlemen, you may see how quickly a man may be shuffled into a wedding ; we liked at first sight, and why should we then defer our joys any longer?

BUD. Like the Spanish, I was beaten into love; but at last have overcome, thanks to mine host, that took my part.

CURDS. And I cheated into a bride; he that stole away my box made up the match between you and me.

BRIS. Is't so, i' faith? then, mistress bride, pray take this box. You know it, I believe, and me too.

HEATH. And you this bundle.

JEN. The thing I was cheated of! Art thou the thief too? O, the very villain!

CURDS. Lay hold of 'um, sweet Budget—the slaves that cheated us in a disguise.

DITTY. Come, what's the matter? we'll have no quarrelling to-night; we forgive all.

GUM. Then your books may be freed for eighteenpence; that's all they are engaged for yet, and the budget but for two shillings.

DITTY, BUD. We forgive most willing.

DITTY. A porter would not have carried 'um so far for the price.

BRIS. Here's a health to the brides, then, out of an extinguisher. I'll find 'um in mice-traps, brushes, steel and tinder-box all their lifetime.

HEATH. And I with brooms.

GUM. I'll cut their corns for nothing, and draw their teeth for a touch of their lips.

DITTY. Defer that health till to-morrow; in the meanwhile let's have on[e] to the genius of good ale.

OMNES. Begin't, begin't!

DITTY. *Submit, bunch of grapes,
To the strong barley ear:
The weak vine no longer
The laurel shall wear.*

- BUD. *Sack and all drinks else,
Desist from the strife,
Ale's th' only aqua vitæ
And liquor of life.*
- ALL TOG. *Then come, my boon fellows,
Let's drink it around ;
It keeps us from th' grave,
Though it lays us o' th' ground.*
- BUD. *Ale's a physician,
No mountebank bragger,
Can cure the chill ague,
Thought't be with the stagger.*
- DITTY. *Ale's a strong wrestler,
Flings all it hath met,
And makes the ground slippery,
Thought't be not wet.*
- OMNES. But come, my boon, &c.
- DITTY. *Ale is both Ceres
And good Neptune too ;
Ale's froth was the sea,
From whence Venus grew.*
- BUD. *Ale is immortal,
And be there no stops,
In bonny lads quaffing,
Can live without hops,*
- OMNES. *Then come, my boon fellows,
Let's drink it around,
It keeps us from th' grave,
Though it lays us o' th' ground.*
- [All drink.]

Enter WELCOME.

WEL. Well said, my whistling birds ; 'tis spring with you all the year long, while the ale flourishes. Come, I have provided a supper will tire your teeth ; 'tis but a prologue, though, of to-morrow's feast. I hope your appetites need no provocations. It now waits for you, but will not be ready till you concoct it. Come then, cheer up, my buxom girls ;

the cakes and posset my wife shall provide, and I'll engage myself to be father to you both.
Ditty's ballads and his budget shall be cut out into favours and gloves. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

WELCOME the Host.

GENTLEMEN and ladies, I am sent to you,
Not to beg cast-by sheets, a shirt or two,
Or clouts for th' teeming women, nor bespeak
Gossips or guests against the christ'ning week :
No offering for the married couple. What, then ?
Only to bid you welcome, gentlemen,
Before your parting ; and for th' women, beg
That, when they travail, you'd not sit cross-leg.
But when their notes are turn'd to childbirth cries,
You'd cry good speed to their deliveries ;
And if our cries have wanted mirth or wit,
There's one more left, We cry you mercy yet !

THE SHEPHERDS' HOLIDAY.

EDITION.

The Shepheards Holy-day. A pastorall tragi-Comædie. Acted before their Majesties at Whitehall by the Queenes Servants. With an Elegie on the death of the most Noble Lady, the Lady Venetia Digby. London, Printed by N. and I. Okes for Iohn Benson. . . . 1635. 8°.

[This is one of the pieces which Isaac Reed did not retain in the edition of 1780, nor is it in that of 1825. Yet there is no apparent ground for its exclusion.

A piece bearing the same title as Rutter's was written by Sir W. Denny at a later date, and is printed from the original MS. in "Inedited Poetical Miscellanies," 1870.

It seems to be a hypothesis sufficiently plausible to justify a passing notice, that in one of the suppressed passages printed at the end of the "Private Memoirs of Sir Kenelm Digby," 1827, the intimacy of Digby with a royal personage is described in very warm terms and colours, and that Rutter, who was in Digby's family at one time, may have founded on what came to his ears the episode of Sylvia and Thyrsis in this production.]

[DODSLEY'S PREFACE.]

THIS author wrote in the reign of Charles the First. He lived with the Earl of Dorset, as tutor to his son, and translated, at the desire of his patron, the Cid of Corneille, a tragi-comedy, in two parts [1640-50, 8°]. It appears, from his dedication of this pastoral to Sir Kenelm Digby, that he lived also with that gentleman for some time, but in what capacity I cannot tell. The plainness and simplicity of this pastoral is commended by Thomas May, author of "The Heir" and "The Old Couple;" and also by Ben Jonson in the following lines—

" I have read

And weigh'd your play ; untwisted every thread,
And know the woof and warp thereof ; can tell
Where it runs round and even ; where so well,
So soft, and smooth it handles, the whole piece,
As it were, spun by nature off the fleece."

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

THYRSIS, the lover of Sylvia.
HYLAS, the lover of Nerina.
MIRTILLUS, the common lover.
DAPHNIS, the rich shepherd.
MONTANUS, an ancient shepherd.
CHARINUS, father to Nerina.
ALCON, an ancient shepherd.
NUNTIUS.

Chorus of Shepherds.

SYLVIA, beloved of Thyrsis.
NERINA, a huntress, beloved of Hylas and of Daphnis.
DORINDA, enamoured of Daphnis.
DELIA, a court lady.

EUARCHUS, King of Arcady.
EUBULUS, his councillor.
CLEANDER, son to Eubulus.
Attendants.

The Scene, Arcady.

THE PROLOGUE FOR THE STAGE.

To this fair company I am to say,
You're welcome all to a well-meaning play ;
For such our author made it, with intent
To defame none. His muse is innocent :
A virgin yet, that has not found the ways
Out of foul crimes to raise herself a praise ;
And therefore she desires you would excuse
All bitter strains, that suit a satire muse :
And that which so much takes the vulgar ear—
Looseness of speech, which they for jests do hear.
She hopes none such are here, therefore she dares Venture this story, purg'd from lighter airs :
A piece entire, without or patch or maim,
Round in itself, and everywhere the same.
And if there be not in't what they call wit,
There might have been, had it been thought so fit.
A shepherd's muse gently of love does sing,
And with it mingles no impurer thing.
Such she presents unto your ears and eyes,
And yet your Christian freedom not denies
Of liking or disliking what you will :
You may say this is well, or that is ill,
Without dispute ; for why should you that pay
For what you have, be taught what you should say ?
Or made to judge by any square or rule,
As if you came not to a stage, but school ?
No, he that made it says, if you will eat,
He will not force your stomachs : there's your meat ;
Which if you like, 'tis well ; if not, all's one ;
There must be difference in opinion.
Besides, he's sure, whatever he could wish,
Your taste, and not his art, must praise the dish.

THE SHEPHERDS' HOLIDAY.

ACTUS I., SCENA 1.

THYRSIS, MONTANUS.

THYR. Here in this grove I left her, here amongst
These poplars, laurels, and these sycamores,
Guilty of her sad loss : and yet behold
They do appear as fresh and full of verdure,
As when my love, clothed in her clearest looks,
Did give them grace and lustre. Why do we,
Poor silly men, bred up in cares and fear,
The nurse of our religion, stoop to Nature,
That only knows to form, not to preserve
What she has made ; since, careless of her work,
She leaves to giddy Fortune the whole power
Of ruling us ? These senseless trees stand still,
And flourish too, and in their pride upbraid
My loss to me ; but my dear Sylvia being Nature's best piece, made to excuse the rest
Of all her vulgar forms, ah me ! was left
To desolation, till some horrid satyr,
Bred in these woods, and furious in his lusts,
Made her his prey ; and now has carried her
Into his dark retirings, or some cave,
Where her poor Thyrsis never more shall see her.
But I will be reveng'd : this wood, that now

Is so bedeck'd with leaves and fresh array,
I'll level with the ground, until it be
As desolate as I.

MON. Alas, poor shepherd! [Aside.]

THYR. It shall afford no shade to anything,
That hither us'd to come for its relief;
But henceforth be for ever infamous:
That, when some gentle shepherd passes by,
And sees this ground rent with the crooked plough:

Here, he may say, here 'twas that Sylvia
Was lost, and then shall turn another way.

MON. Good Thyrsis, do not make so much of grief,
Y' have fed it with too many tears already;
Take comfort now.

THYR. What has my present state
To do with comfort? If you see the trees Widow'd of leaves, the earth grown hard, and spoil'd

Of the green mantles which she wont to wear,
You wonder not if winter then appear.

MON. By these we know that season.

THYR. And must I,
When she is gone, whose sun-like eyes did cherish
An everlasting summer in my life,
Feel any spring of joy to comfort me?
No, father, grief with me is best in season.

MON. But whilst you mourn thus, who looks to your flock?

THYR. All as the shepherd is, such be his flocks,
So pine and languish they, as in despair
He pines and languishes; their fleecy locks
Let hang disorder'd, as their master's hair,
Since she is gone that deck'd both him and them.
And now what beauty can there be to live,
When she is lost that did all beauty give?

MON. But yet, methinks, for one that is a stranger,

Scarce known to any here, but by her name,
 These plaints are overmuch. Besides, there are
 In fruitful Arcady as fair as she :
 I'm sure more rich and wise : make out of them
 A choice. Nerina is as fair as she,
 Dorinda's flocks are more than Sylvia's,
 And carry on their backs more wool than hers.

THYR. Let such base peasants as the gods do hate
 Admire their wealth and them for what they have,

Their bodies' and their souls material
 Alike of drossy substance are compounded,
 And can contemplate nothing but the earth.
 No, Sylvia, whom some better god, perhaps
 For the reward of my well-tuned pipe,
 Sent down to me, made up of air and fire ;
 Though since, because I knew not how to use
 With fair respect a gift so great as she,
 Has justly reft her from me,—is so much,
 So great a part of me, that in her absence
 Amidst my grief I feel some little joy,
 To see how much of me each minute wasteth,
 And gives me hope, that when I shall dissolve
 This earthly substance, and be pure as she (For sure the gods have ta'en her undefil'd),
 I may enjoy her looks, and though it be
 Profane to touch a hallowed thing like her,
 I may adore her yet, and recompense
 With my religion the proud thoughts I had Once to enjoy her.

MON. See how fond you are
 T'embrace a shadow, and to leave the substance !
 The love of Hylas to Nerina has More hopes than yours ; though she be young and coy,
 Yet whilst Nerina is and Hylas too,
 One time or other they may both have joy.

THYR. May they prove happy in each other's
love,

And nothing please, but what each other do ;

For so liv'd Thyrsis and his Sylvia :

Whilst Sylvia was, and Thyrsis was her love.

Whatever Thyrsis pip'd, pleas'd Sylvia ;

Thyrsis admir'd whatever Sylvia sung,

And both their joys were equal or but one.

Well, I can now remember (and it is Some comfort to remember what I moan)

That, when our loves began, how first I gaz'd

On her, and she was pleas'd that I should look,

Till greedily I had devour'd the hook.

Love gave me courage then to speak my thoughts,

And gave her pity to receive my words,

They link'd our hearts together : from that time,

Whene'er she saw me strike the furious boar,

Though then my case she ru'd, and sigh'd full oft,

Yet was she pleas'd to see my victory,

And I receiv'd my vigour from her eye.

Then would she make me chaplets of the best

And choicest flowers, to adorn my head :

Which when I wore, methought I did then grasp

The empire of the world. But what of that ?

The more I then enjoy'd of heavenly bliss,

The more my present grief and passion is.

MON. Well, Thyrsis, since my words do but renew

The story of your grief, I'll leave to use

Persuasions to you ; for 'tis time, I see,

And not my words, must cure your malady. [Exit.]

THYR. That time must put a period to my life,

Or else it never will unto my grief :

Come, boy, and under this same hanging bough

The note, which thou attemper'st to my words,

Sing, and be happier than thy master, boy.

1.

BOY. *Shall I, because my love is gone,
Accuse those golden darts,
Which to a blessed union
Struck our two loving hearts, Since fortune, and not love, hath caus'd my moan?*

2.

*No, her pure image I shall prize,
Imprinted in my breast,
More than the fairest mistress' eyes,
That ever swain possess'd,
Which in eternal bonds my fancy ties.*

3.

*Come then, you sharpest griefs, and try
If you can pierce my heart,
But use, if you would have me die,
The best you can of art,
To wound a breast so arm'd with constancy.*

THYR. Enough : I'll sigh the rest out. Go, my boy,
Be careful of thy tender lambs, whilst I
Seek out some hidden place to pine and die.

SCENA II.

HYLAS, MIRTILLUS.

Believe, Mirtillus, never any love
Was bought with other price than love alone,
Since nothing is more precious than itself :
It being the purest abstract of that fire

Which wise Prometheus first indu'd us with ;
And he must love that would be lov'd again.

MIR. Why, who can say Mirtillus does not
love ?

Mirtillus, he who has employ'd his youth
Ever in service of the fairest nymphs,

HYL. Mirtillus cannot love.

MIR. No, gentle Hylas ?

This riband and this hair you see me wear,
Are they not ensigns of a lover ? Say,
What shepherdess whom ever swain thought fair,
Has not Mirtillus courted, and obtain'd
Some favour from. But you will think, because I do not fold my arms, and sigh, and spend
The days, the gods have given me to rejoice,
In whining passion, walking still alone,
Now proud with hopes, then cast down with despair,

Unequal to myself in everything,
I cannot love. No, Hylas, know I love
Dorinda, Chloris, Amarillis, all
Whom ever love did to his altars call :
And when this mistress frowns, I am content
To take another ; when that flame is spent
By time, or put out by a rival, straight
A third supplies her place, perhaps more worthy ;
If less, because she loves, I'll think her so.

HYL. Alas, Mirtillus ! I do pity thee—
Pity the error which thou wander'st in,
That think'st thou lov'st, and know'st not what it is.

MIR. Why, what is love, say you, if mine be
not ?

HYL. I know, Mirtillus, that no lover yet
Purchas'd a lasting pleasure without grief ;
For love has gall in it as well as honey,
And so compounded that, whosoe'er will taste
The sweets of it, must take the bitter too,

Out of both which is made our constancy .
 You, that embrace the false delights alone,
 Are a feign'd lover or (more truly) none.

MIR. I know not what you mean by constancy :
 I'm sure I love the fairest.

HYL. Still you err ;
 For, if you lov'd the fairest, none had been
 The object of your choice but my Nerina ;
 Nerina, she the glory of these woods,
 The only subject of all shepherds' song.

MIR. She has her share of beauty with the rest,
 And I confess she's fit for love as any ;
 But why she only should take up your breast,
 And shut out all that have a right as good,
 Whose equal or transcendent beauty pleads
 As just a title to't as hers can do,
 I cannot reach the reason, but admire
 Your faith and (what you praise) your constancy.

HYL. Mirtillus, though I know your stubborn
 heart
 Could never entertain a lover's thought,
 Yet did I think you would have been more tender

How you profan'd a name so sacred as Nerina's is, whom never any swain,
 Nor rural god, nor satyr, though he be
 Of savage kind, would ever violate :
 Nerina, in whose form love ever dwells,
 Attended by the Graces, which do range
 Themselves in order 'bout her comely face :
 Whose breasts without are hills of whitest snow,
 Within, the seat of blameless modesty,
 Regard of honour and pure chastity ;
 Nor may a loose thought ever harbour there
 To tempt such lovers as you seem to be :
 Is it for that you slight her ?

MIR. No, I love her
 As I do others, with whom I compare her.

But you, that love with such intemperance,
 Make of your love a glass, wherein you see
 Each thing much greater than indeed it is :
 My love's too cold, you say ; but I am sure
 Yours is too hot for any to endure :

A mean, perhaps, 'twixt these I might approve.

HYL. You might, if there were any mean in
 love.

MIR. But whilst we talk thus, see, the flame has caught you ;

Your beauteous flame, Nerina, is at hand,
 Dorinda with her : dare you stay th' encounter ?

HYL. No, let's withdraw, and watch her, where she goes.

SCENA III.

NERINA, DORINDA.

Dorinda, I have miss'd the chase to-day,
 Such is my chance, and he that lodg'd the deer
 Told me it was the fairest in these woods.

DOR. The gods do love you, sure, that thus have left

Your thoughts so free for sport ; mine are not so.

NER. Thou art in love, I warrant, art thou not ?

DOR. That angry god pursues me in his fury,
 And forces me to love where I am scorn'd.
 Hapless Dorinda, why should he despise thee ?
 Many a swain and many a rural god
 Have sought thy favours, and have sought in vain :
 Now thou art justly punish'd with disdain.

NER. Trust me, sweetheart, I cannot choose but wonder,

To think that one of such a comely grace—
 I do not flatter you—could sue to any
 For love, who are much fitter to be lov'd :
 Scorn him as much as he does thee ; for men
 Love us no more ! when we love them again.

DOR. Ah, good Nerina, you have spoken truth :
 It may warn other nymphs by my example,
 How they profess their loves to any man :
 I am past cure, for¹ he that wounded me
 Has left me quite disarm'd, and robb'd me of
 All those defensive arts which men will say
 Are natural and proper to our sex.
 I cannot change a face or weep one tear,
 Or laugh against my will, so violently
 My fate hath thrust me to this love, that all
 My faculties confess their weakness ; and
 My flame is got so much above my reach,
 I cannot put it out, nor smother it.

NER. Alas, poor wench ! tell me, who is the man
 Made up of so much rigid cruelty,
 That I may shun him wheresoe'er I go.

DOR. Do not you know him ?

NER. No.

DOR. I hear he boasts
 To every shepherd and to every nymph
 How much I love him.

NER. Then it must be Daphnis.

DOR. Venus forgive me if I do disclose him,
 But he will do't himself : 'tis he, Nerina.

NER. Daphnis, that woos my father to win me ;
 He is my daily suitor ; now I know
 How much he owes to pity and to thee ;
 Until he pay that debt, I shall despise him.

DOR. Why, do not you love him as much as I ?

NER. Love him ! I know no greater misery,
 Than to love one that's not of human race—
 A tiger rather ; but a tiger is more mild
 Than he.

DOR. For love's sake, say not so !
 He has a manly feature, and does show

¹ [Old copy, the cure, he.]

As much of grace in his comportment as
 The best of shepherds can ; him Titan made
 Of better clay than he did other men,
 Although his heart be flint and hardest rock.
 Yet is his heart so hard, or are my parts
 Rather unequal to his high deserts ?
 For he can love, I see, since you he loves,
 And you deserve it. Had he thought me worthy,
 He would have lov'd me too ; but as I am
 Worthless Dorinda, I am made his scorn,
 And I had rather be so, than Nerina
 Should want a servant such as Daphnis is.

NER. Prythee, no more of him : I hate his name
 As much as I would do the loss of honour,
 Which he injuriously would rob me of.
 No, no, Dorinda, if by love I be Enthrall'd to any, Daphnis is not he.

DOR. Why, is there any can deserve you more ?

NER. Yes, many, that I could tell how to love
 Rather than him : for why should I love him,
 Whilst Hylas lives, and languishes for me ?
 Hylas, who lov'd me in my infancy,
 And being then a boy, was never well
 If I was absent ; nor indeed was I
 Content with any but his company.
 Our flocks still fed together : I on him,
 And he on me did feed his greedy eyes.
 Since, though his years have styl'd him man, he has

Continu'd that first love with such respects,
 So full of innocence and simple truth,
 That howsoe'er my outward coyness is,
 My heart within tells me 'tis only his.
 Ah me ! my father ! prythee, let's away.

DOR. But Daphnis comes with him : for love's sake, stay !

SCENA IV.

HYLAS, MIRTILLUS, CHARINUS, DAPHNIS.

Pan be as cruel to his flocks and him
As he has been to me!

MIR. Go, leave your cursing,
And follow her; let me alone with him.

CHAR. Ha! have I found you? Ho! Nerina, stay!

Your father calls you; was not that my daughter
That made away so fast?

MIR. Who, she that's gone?
Believe your eyes no more, they are false to you.
Could you take one for her that's nothing like her?
'Twas Chloris went from us.

CHAR. Is't possible?

MIR. 'Tis true.

DAPH. I thought that it had been my love.

CHAR. I durst have sworn that she had been my daughter.

What made she here? 'Twill ne'er be otherwise;
Young women will be chatting with young men,
Whate'er their fathers say. It was not so
When I was young—a boy, as you are, shepherds.

MIR. We are not men with him till after fifty.

CHAR. We never durst keep company with women,
Nor they with us: each one did carefully
Attend his charge. And when the time was come,
That we grew ripe in years, and were staid youths,
Our fathers would provide us wives: we did not
Carve for ourselves, as nowadays they do.
But now our children think themselves as wise,
Nay, wiser than their fathers, and will rule 'em:
They can no sooner peep out of the shell,
But they must love, forsooth. I would fain know,

Whether 'twere fit a maid should be in love—
I speak now of that skittish girl, my daughter—
Before she ask her father's leave and liking ?

DAPH. 'Tis true, Charinus, 'twere not fit indeed.
Who should bestow the daughter but the father ?

MIR. But, shepherds, did you never hear that once

There was an age, the nearest to the gods :
An age we rather praise than imitate ;
When no man's will nor woman's was enfore'd
To any bent but its own motion ?
Each follow'd nature's laws, and by instinct
Did love the fairest, and enjoy their wishes :
Love then, not tied to any interest
Of blood or fortune, hasten'd to his end
Without control, nor did the shepherd number
Her sheep that was his choice, but every grace
That did adorn her beauteous mind or face.
Riches with love then were not valued—
Pure, uncompounded love—that could despise
The whole world's riches for a mistress' eyes.
Pray tell me, Daphnis—you are young and handsome,

The lover of our fairest nymph Nerina—
Would you, for all that fruitful Sicily
Can yield, or all the wealth of Persia,
Change one poor lock of your fair mistress' hair,
Whilst she is yours, and you her shepherd are ?

DAPH. Would she were mine, I'd ask no portion.

MIR. Spoke like a lover of the ancient stamp !

CHAR. Son, son, she shall be yours : why, am not I

Her father, she my daughter ? May not I Bestow her where I please ?

MIR. Yes, if she like

The man, she will bestow herself, ne'er fear it.

CHAR. What ! she bestow herself without my leave ?

No, no, Mirtillus, you mistake my daughter.
 I cannot get her once to think of marriage,
 And truly I do muse to see a wench,
 That in all other things (although I say it)
 Has wit at will : can pin her sheep in fold
 As well as any : knows when to drive them home ;

And there she can do twenty things as well :
 Yet when I speak to her of marriage,
 She turns the head : she'll be a Dryad, she,
 Or one of those fond nymphs of Dian's train.

MIR. Old man, believe her not, she means not
 so ;

She loves to keep the thing for which she is
 So much belov'd—I mean her maidenhead—
 Which, whilst she has, she knows to play the tyrant,

And make us slaves unto her scornful looks :
 For beauty then itself most justifies,
 When it is courted ; if not lov'd, it dies.

CHAR. Well, we will think of this. Come,
 Daphnis, come,

I see you love my daughter, and you only
 Shall have her ; it is I that tell you so,
 That am her father.

DAPH. Thank you, good Charinus ;
 But I had rather she had told me so. [Aside.]

ACTUS II., SCÆNA 1.

THYRSIS, MONTANUS. To them MIRTILLUS.

[THYR.] This day the sun shot forth his beams as fair

As e'er he did, and through the trembling air
 Cool Zephyrus with gentle murmuring

Breath'd a new freshness on each tree and plant :
 My kids are gamesome too, as e'er they were ;
 All show a face of gladness but myself.

MON. And why not you as well by their example ?

THYR. Not in this life : here joy would be untimely :

The gods reserve for me their comforts in
 Th' Elysian fields, or else they mock my sorrows.

MON. O, say not so, they're just and pitiful.

THYR. They are, but, father—so I still must call you—

When in the sadness of my soul I ask'd
 Before the altar of our great Apollo,
 What should become of me, or where my love,
 Bright Sylvia, was, whether alive or dead,
 Why should the oracle reply : Go home,
Thou shalt enjoy thy Sylvia ?

MON. What more could you Desire to hear ?

THYR. Ay, but when greedily
 I ask'd the time, the answer was, That day
Thou art not Thyrsis, nor she Sylvia.
 Then in this life I'm sure it must not be,
 For I was Thyrsis ever call'd, and she Known by no other name than Sylvia.

MON. It may be, for your importunity
 You might deserve this answer, or else is it
 Because the gods speak not their mysteries
 To be conceiv'd by every vulgar sense ?
 I now remember what Acrisius,
 The wise and virtuous Acrisius,
 Was wont to say.

THYR. Why, what said he ?
 Does it concern me aught ?

MON. It may do, son ;
 He bid us fly all curiosity,
 Seeking to know what future time may bring

To us, which only gods above do know ;
 And if at any time they do impart
 This knowledge unto us, it is enwrapp'd
 In such a mist, as we shall ne'er see through it :
 Because, said he, we have enough to do
 With what is present ; the celestial powers
 Would not cut off our hopes, nor multiply
 Our cares, by showing us our destiny.

THYR. O, this discourse to a despairing lover
 What comfort does it bring ? for heaven's sake, leave it

And me ; for I am best, I find, alone.
 Yet stay, there's something that I fain would ask
 you :

You said this circle here about my neck
 Has so continued from my infancy,
 When first you took me up.

MON. 'Tis true, that circle
 Hung loosely then about your neck, which since Is fill'd with it. I left it there, because I saw some letters that were wrought about it.

THYR. And may they not be read ?

MON. I think they may :
 But I could never find so great a clerk
 As could tell how t' expound the meaning of them.

THYR. My life is nothing but a mystery ;
 That which I was, and that which I shall be,
 Is equally unknown. Now, if you'll leave me
 Unto my thoughts, they'll keep me company.

MON. I will ; but here is one come to supply me.

Enter to him MIRTILLUS.

MIR. Ay, let me alone.

Sings.

*He that mourns for a mistress,
 When he knows not where she is,*

*Let him kiss her shadow fair,
Or engender with the air ;
Or see, if with his tears he can
Swell at an ebb the ocean :
Then, if he had not rather die,
Let him love none, or all, as I.*

This is the doctrine that I ever taught you,
And yet you profit not : these scurvy passions Hang on you still. You that are young and active,

That may have all our nymphs at your devotion,
To live a whining kind of life as this,
How ill it does become you !

THYR. True, Mirtillus ;

And yet I do not envy thee the pleasure
Thou hast in thy dispers'd affections.

MIR. You would, if your head were right once ;
but love—

Your love does make an ass of all your reason.

THYR. Sure, a true lover is more rational .

Than you, that love at random everywhere.

MIR. I do not think so ; all the reason love
Has left you to employ in this discourse
Will hardly bring me to confess it to you.

THYR. Why, all men's actions have some proper end,

Whereto their means and strict endeavours tend :
Else there would be nought but perplexity
In human life, and all uncertainty.

MIR. Well, what will you infer on this ?

THYR. That you,

Who know no end at all of wild desire,
Must in your wand'ring fancy see this way
Leads unto madness, when too late you find
That nothing satisfies a boundless mind.

MIR. Ay, but I do confine myself to two Or three at most ; in this variety

I please myself ; for what is wanting in
One, I may find it in another.

THYR. No.

Not in another ; one is the only centre
The line of love is drawn to, must have all
Perfections in her, all that's good and fair,
Or else her lover must believe her so.

MIR. Ay, there's your error, that's the ground of all

Your tears and sighs, your fruitless hopes and fears,

When she perhaps has not so much t' adorn her
As the least grace your thoughts bestow upon her.

THYR. Well, be it so ; and yet this fair idea,
Which I have fram'd unto myself, does argue Virtue in me ; so that, if she be lost,
Or dead—ah me ! the sad remembrance of
My Sylvia causes this—yet I must love,
Because the character is indelibly

Writ in my heart, and heaven is witness to it.

MIR. Well, I'll no more of this, I'll be converted

Rather than call this grief to your remembrance.

THYR. Why, dost thou think I ever shall forget her ?

Or that where'er I set my careful foot,
As in this place, will it not tell me that Here Sylvia and I walk'd hand in hand,
And here she pluck'd a flower, and anon
She gave it me ; and then we kiss'd, and here
We mutually did vow each other's love ?

MIR. Nay leave, good Thyrsis : I did come to tell you

This holiday our royal Prince Euarchus,
Being remov'd to his house here near adjoining,
Sent to command us to attend his person,
With all our sports and wonted merriment,
Wherein you always bore the chiefest part.

And I have heard ('tis not to make you blush)
 The princess has commended your rare art
 And handsome graces, which you gave your music.
 Come, you must go with us, for Hylas is
 So far engag'd in love, and near his hopes,
 He will not stir unless his mistress go.

THYR. Alas, Mirtillus! I have broke my pipe,
 My sighs are all the music which I now
 Can make, and how unfit I am t' attend
 So great an expectation, you may see.
 Yet give me leave to think on it; at night
 Perhaps I'll go with you.

MIR. Till then farewell. [Exit THYRSIS.]
 The gentlest youth that ever play'd on pipe,
 But see, who's here? O, 'tis my other lover,
 His mistress with him; I will not disturb him.

SCENA II.

NERINA, HYLAS, MIRTILLUS.

NER. Shepherd, I would you'd leave to follow me.

HYL. How can I, sweetest, when my heart is
 with you?

NER. With me? Then tell me where, and see how soon

I shall restore it you.

MIR. O, this is fine! [Aside.]

HYL. It hangs upon your eyes where, being scorch'd

With their disdain, and dazzl'd with their lustre.

It flies for ease unto your rosy lips.

But, beaten thence with many a harsh denial,

Fain would it come for better harbour here;

But here for ever it must be an exile.

For pity then, fair nymph, receive it you;

And if you can, teach it the hardness of

Your own, and make it marble, as yours is.

MIR. I see he is not such a novice as
I took him for; he can tell how to speak. [Aside.]

NER. Well, if my heart be such as you will make it,
I am so much the gladder that it is
Of strength to be a fence unto my honour.

HYL. In vain a fence is made to guard the sheep,
Where no wolf ever came.

NER. What, if within
It keep a dog of prey, would they be safe?
For my part, I'll not cherish in my breast
The man that would undo my chastity.

HYL. Then cherish me, for you best know I never
Attempted anything to cast a spot
On that white innocence, to which I am
A most religious votary.

MIR. More fool you!
It may be, if you had, it needed not
Ha' come to this. [Aside.]

NER. Yes, yes, you may remember,
I blush to tell it you, when first my thoughts
Were pure and simple—as I hope they are Still, and will so continue, whilst I fly
Such company as you—I thought you one
Whom never any flame impure had touch'd:
Then we convers'd without suspect together.

HYL. And am I not so still? why do you now
Fly from me thus?

NER. The cause I shall tell you,
Since you will not remember; though it be Unfit for me to speak, yet you shall know
How just my anger is.

HYL. Ah me most wretched!
What have I done?

NER. When tending of my flocks
Under the shade of yonder myrtle-tree,

Which bears the guilt of your foul misdemeanour,
 My maid Corisca cried out for my help,
 Because a bee had stung her in the face :
 You heard me speak in pity of her smart,
 A charm my mother taught me, that, being said
 Close to the place affected, takes away
 The pain : which gave her ease. But you, uncivil,
 Turning my courtesy to your vile ends,
 Feign'd you were stung too, and cried out your lips

Had from the same sharp point receiv'd a wound :
 Pray'd me to say the same charm over there.
 I charitably lent my help to you,
 Mistrusting nothing of your purposes,
 When with ungentle hands you held me fast,
 And for my thanks gave me a lustful kiss.
 Canst thou remember this, and yet not blush ?
 O impudence !

HYL. You will excuse the heat
 Of my desires ; still I feel that sting,
 But dare not ask the cure, nor did I then Do any hurt : but since you think it was
 A fault, I do repent it, and am sorry
 I did offend you so.

MIR. Better and better !
 He'll cry anon, he has already ask'd
 Forgiveness of her.

[Aside.]

NER. Well, shepherd, look
 You never see me more : I cannot love
 At all, or if at all, not you : let this Settle your thoughts.

HYL. O, it distracts them more :
 But since my presence is offensive to you,
 I must obey, yet, if I thought you would,
 When I am dead—the martyr of your beauty,
 Shed one poor tear on my untimely grave,
 And say that Hylas was unfortunate,
 To love where he might not be lov'd again,

My ashes would find rest. And so farewell :
The fairest, but the cruel'st nymph alive !

MIR. What, will you leave her thus ?

HYL. I prythee, come,
The sentence of my banishment is pass'd,
Never to be recall'd.

MIR. Are these the hopes
You fed upon ? O, what a thing in nature
Is a coy woman ! or how great a fool
The man is that will give her leave to rule !

[Exit HYLAS.]

SCENA III.

NERINA.

NER. Alas ! my Hylas, my beloved soul,
Durst she whom thou hast call'd cruel Nerina
But speak her thoughts, thou wouldst not think her so ;

To thee she is not cruel, but to herself :
That law, which nature hath writ in my heart,
Taught me to love thee, Hylas, and obey
My father too, who says I must not love thee.

O disproportion'd love and duty, how Do you distract me ? If I love my choice,
I must be disobedient ; if obedient,
I must be link'd to one I cannot love.

Then either, Love, give me my liberty,
Or, Nature, from my duty set me free. [Exit.]

SCENA IV.

DAPHNIS.

DAPH. Nerina, since nor tears nor prayers can move

Thy stubborn heart, I'll see what gifts can do :
They of my rank, whom most do deem unworthy

Of any virgin's love, being rough, and bred
 To manage the estates our fathers left us,
 Unskill'd in those hid mysteries, which Love's
 Professors only know, have yet a way
 To gain our wishes. First we get the father :
 He knows our pleasure, and gives his consent.
 The daughter's eyes being blinded with our gifts,
 Cannot so soon spy our deformities,
 But we may catch her too. This Alcon says,
 A man whom age and observation taught
 What I must learn ; yet though most women be Such as he has deliver'd, my Nerina
 Seems not to have regard to what I give,
 But holds me and my gifts both at one rate.
 What can I hope, then, out of this poor present :
 A looking-glass which, though within our plains
 'Tis seldom seen, yet I have heard in cities
 They are as common as a lock of wool.
 However, if she take it, I am happy,
 So Alcon tells me ; and he knows full well
 (He gave it me) that, whose'er shall look
 Her face in it, shall be at my dispose.
 In confidence of this, I will present it,
 And see my fortune ; sure, I must needs speed :
 My friend, her father, comes along with her.
 But, O my fate ! is not that nymph Dorinda
 Which keeps them company ? Yes, sure, 'tis she ;
 A curse light on her importunity !
 Her father urges something, and I hope
 On my behalf ; let me observe a little.

SCENA V.

CHARINUS, NERINA, DORINDA, DAPHNIS.

CHAR. And as I oft have told you, I do wish
 To see you wise.

DOR. Is she not so, Charinus?
Does she say anything that's out of reason?
CHAR. Do not tell me of reason; I would hear
Of her obedience: therefore I say, be wise,
And do as I would have you.

DOR. What would you
Have her to do? you see she answers not
To contradict you.

CHAR. I will have her answer
To what I now demand, that is, to marry
Daphnis, and I will have her love him too.

DOR. Love him, Charinus! that you cannot do:
Her body you may link i' th' rites of Hymen;
Her will she must bestow herself, not you.

DAPH. O, she was born to be a plague unto me.

[Aside.]

CHAR. Why should she wish or hope for anything,
But what I'd have her wish or hope for only?
Come, to be short, answer me, and directly;
Are you content to marry Daphnis, say?

NER. What is your pleasure, father?

CHAR. You do not hear,
It seems, but what you list; I ask you once
Again, if you will marry Daphnis? speak.

NER. Sir, I would marry whom you please to give me;
I neither can nor ought to make my choice,
I would refer that to you: but you know
My inclination never lay to marry.

CHAR. I know you shall do that which I command.

NER. Now heaven forbid that I, who have thus long
Vow'd to Diana my virginity,
To follow her a huntress in these woods,
Should yield myself to the impure delights
Of Hymen, and so violate my faith.

CHAR. A fine devotion, is it not? to make
A vow, and never ask your father leave!
The laws will not permit it to be so.

DOR. The vow, Charinus, is not made to men:
The laws have not to do with that which is Seal'd and recorded in the court of heaven.

CHAR. Do not tell me of vows: I'll have her
marry,
And marry Daphnis: is he not rich and handsome?

DOR. Ah me! I would he were not rich nor handsome:
It may be then he would regard my sufferings.

[Aside.
CHAR. No, daughter, do not you believe you can Catch me with shifts and tricks: I see, I tell you,
Into your heart.

NER. Alas! I would you did;
Then your discourse would tend another way.

CHAR. Yes, you have made a vow, I know, which
is,

Whilst you are young, you will have all the youth
To follow you with lies and flatteries.

Fool, they'll deceive you; when this colour fades,
Which will not always last, and you go crooked,
As if you sought your beauty lost i' th' ground;
Then they will laugh at you, and find some other
Fit for their love; where, if you do as I Command you, I have one 'will make you happy.

NER. Ah me most miserable!

DAPH. Now I'll come in,
And see what I can do with this my gift.

CHAR. Look now, as if the Fates would have it so,
He comes just in the nick of my discourse:
Come, use him kindly now, and then you shall Redeem what you have lost—my good opinion.

NER. O most ungrateful chance! how I do hate
The sight of him!

DOR. Were it to me he came,
How happy would this fair encounter be !

CHAR. Daphnis, you're welcome, very welcome
to me,

And to my daughter : what is that you have there ?

DAPH. A present, which I mean to give my love.

CHAR. See but how true a lover Daphnis is ;
His hand is never empty when he comes.

Welcome him, daughter : look what he has for you.

DAPH. O good Charinus ! none must look in it,
But she herself to whom it is presented.

CHAR. I am an old man, I, and therefore care
not

To see my wither'd face and hoary hair :

Give it that young thing, she knows what to do with it.

Daughter, come hither ; use him courteously

And kindly too : be sure you take his gift. [Aside.]

Daphnis, I'll leave you both together here ;

My sheep are shearing, I can stay no longer. [Exit.]

DAPH. Farewell, old man ; health to my dearest mistress.

NER. And to you, shepherd.

DOR. Daphnis, am not I

Worthy to have a share in your salute ?

DAPH. How can I give thee part of that, whereof
I have no share myself ?

DOR. If you would love

There where you are belov'd again, you might

Make your content such as you would yourself.

DAPH. If you, Nerina, would vouchsafe to love

Him that loves you, and ever will, you might

Make your content such as you would yourself.

NER. Shepherd, I oft have wish'd you not to trouble

Me and yourself with words : I cannot love you.

DAPH. As oft, Dorinda, have I spoke to you,
To leave to trouble me : I cannot love you.

DOR. Will you then slight my love because 'tis offer'd ?

DAPH. Will you then slight my love because 'tis offer'd ?

NER. Somebody else may love you, I cannot.

DAPH. Somebody else may love you, I cannot.

DOR. O cruel words, how they do pierce my heart !

DAPH. O cruel words, how they do pierce my heart !

NER. How can I help it, if your destiny
Lead you to love where you may not obtain ?

DAPH. How can I help it, if your destiny
Lead you to love where you may not obtain ?

DOR. It is not destiny that injures me ;
It is thy cruel will and marble heart.

DAPH. It is not destiny that injures me ;
It is thy cruel will and marble heart.

NER. No, Daphnis, 'tis not hardness of my heart,
Nor any cruelty that causes this.

DAPH. Then 'tis disdain of me.

NER. Nor is it that :

I do not see in Daphnis anything
To cause disdain.

DOR. Why do you not reply
In those same words to me, malicious Echo ?

DAPH. I pray, leave me ; I have other business
now

To trouble me ; if you disdain me not,
Fair nymph, as you pretend, receive my offer.

NER. What's that ?

DAPH. My heart.

DOR. I will, gentle Daphnis.

DAPH. O importunity !

NER. Give her thy heart.

She has deserv'd it, for she loves thee, Daphnis.

DAPH. First, I would tear it piecemeal here before you.

DOR. O me unfortunate ! O cruel man !

NER. Stay, good Dorinda, I'll go with thee ; stay.

DAPH. Let her go where she will ; behold, sweet saint,

This mirror here, the faithful representer
Of that which I adore, your beauteous form ;
When you do see in that how lovely are
Your looks, you will not blame my love.

NER. If I refuse it,

My father will be angry. [Aside.] Let me see it.
Here, take thy glass again : what ails my head ?
I know not where I am, it is so giddy :
And something like a drowsiness has seiz'd
My vital spirits.

DAPH. How do you, love ?

NER. Heavy o' th' sudden ; I'll go home and sleep.

DAPH. So, let her go, and let this work awhile.
She cast an eye upon me as she went,
That by its languishing did seem to say,
Daphnis, I'm thine ; thou hast o'ercome at last.
Alcon, th' hast made me happy by thy art.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS III., SCENA I.

☞ SYLVIA, DELIA.

Q. Tell me what you think on earth
The greatest bliss ?

A. Riches, honour, and high birth.

Q. Ah ! what is this ?

If love be banished the heart,
The joy of Nature, not of Art ?

2.

*What's honour worth or high descent ?
Or ample wealth,
If cares do breed us discontent,
Or want of health ?*
A. *It is the order of the Fates,
That these should wait on highest states.*

3.

CHORUS. *Love only does our souls refine,
And by his skill
Turns human things into divine,
And guides our will.
Then let us of his praises sing :
Of love, that sweetens everything.*

DEL. Madam, you're overheard.

SYL. I care not, Delia.

Although my liberty and free discourse
Be here denied me, yet the air is common :
To it, then, will I utter my complaints,
Or to thee, friend, to whom my love will dare
To show the secrets of my heart ; for others
I do not care nor fear, so thou be faithful.

DEL. Madam, I have no life, but what I wish
May be employ'd to do your beauty's service ;
My tongue is rul'd by yours : what you would have
It speak, it shall ; else further than my thoughts
Nothing shall venture that you leave to me :
And those my thoughts I'll keep to such restraint,
As they shall never come within my dreams,
Lest they betray your counsels. This I vow Religiously by—

SYL. Hold, I will not Have thee to swear, nor would I thou shouldst think

That I so much suspect thee, as to urge
 An oath ; I know thou hast too much of goodness,
 That's bred within thee, to betray a trust :
 And therefore, without further circumstance,
 I'll let thee know my fortunes, part of which
 I'm sure th' hast heard already.

DEL. Madam, I have,
 And wish'd that they had sorted to your wishes.

SYL. I thank thee, Delia ; but my evil genius,
 That has pursu'd my innocence with hate,
 Brought me from thence, where I had set my heart,
 Unto this cursed Court which, though it be
 My place of birth and breeding, I do find
 Nothing but torment and affliction in it.

DEL. I guess the cause, sweet madam, but that's pass'd
 And now forgotten : if you clear your looks,
 Your father will enlarge you, and ne'er think
 On what you did, but that you are his daughter.

SYL. Alas, my Delia ! thou dost mistake :
 My liberty is of no worth to me,
 Since that my love, I fear, will ne'er be free :
 Nor do I care what idle ladies talk
 Of my departure or my strange disguise,
 To colour my intents ; I am above
 Their envy or their malice :
 But for th' unlucky chance that sent to me
 The over-curious eyes of him I hate—
 Thou know'st the man.

DEL. Yes, you mean Cleander,
 Son to Eubulus, who is now your keeper :
 What star directed him to find you out ?

SYL. His love, forsooth ; for so he colour'd his Unseason'd boldness : told me he was not able To want my sight : and so, when every one
 Had given o'er their strict inquiry of me,
 He only, with too much officiousness,
 Observ'd me in the woods, walking alone :

And when I would have shunn'd him, which perhaps
 Had I not done, he had not so well known me :
 He came and utter'd, as his manner was,
 His tedious complaints ; until at length
 He brought me with him, making no resistance :
 And to ingratiate himself the more,
 He said he would convey me where my father
 Should have no knowledge of me. I refused it ;
 Willing, however, to be rid of him.
 And now, you know, it is a full month since
 I did return to Court, but left my heart
 Behind me in those fields wherein I joy'd.

DEL. Madam, has not the Court more pleasure in it

'Than the dull country, which can represent
 Nothing but what does taste of solitude ?
 'Twas something else that carried you away.

SYL. 'Tis true, my Delia ; for though thou wert
 Privy to my departure, yet the cause
 Thou couldst not tell, which I will now unfold ;
 And think I trust my honour in thy hands,
 And maiden modesty : 'twas love that did it.

DEL. Love, madam ! Sure, it is impossible
 You should find anything there worth your love.

SYL. Thou know'st the shepherds that do dwell about

This place which, for their entertainments only,
 The king my father built, did use to come,
 As now they do, being sent for unto Court :
 I ever lik'd their sports, their harmless mirth,
 And their contentions, which were void of malice,
 And wish'd I had been born just such an one.

DEL. Your state is better, madam, as you are.

SYL. But I confess the rather, 'cause there was One amongst them of a more comely grace
 (Though none of them did seem uncomely to me)
 Call'd Thyrsis ; and with him methought I could Draw out my life rather than any other,

Such things my fancy then suggested to me :
 So well he sung, so passionate his love
 Show'd in his verse, thereto so well express'd,
 As any one would judge it natural :
 Yet never felt he flame, till this of me :
 Often he came, and oft'ner was desir'd
 Of me ; nor did I shame in public there
 Before my father to commend his graces ;
 Which when I did, the whole Court, as they use,
 Consented with me, and did strive to make them
 Greater than I or any else could think them :
 At last I was surpris'd, I could not help it ;
 My fate with love consenting, so would have it :
 Then did I leave the Court—I've told thee all.

DEL. 'Tis strange ! but, madam, though in that disguise,

How could you hope (a stranger) to be lov'd
 Of him you held so dear ?

SYL. I feign'd myself

Of Smyrna, and from thence some goats I had
 And sheep, with them a rich commodity.
 Near him I bought me land to feed them ; he Seem'd glad of it, and thinking me a stranger,
 Us'd me with such civility and friendship,
 As one would little look for of a shepherd ;
 And did defend me from the avarice
 Of the old shepherds, which did think to make A prey of what I had. At length I saw
 He did address himself with fear to me,
 Still gazing on me. Knowing my love to him,
 I easily believ'd he lov'd me too—
 For love, alas ! is ever credulous—
 And though I was resolv'd (having my end,
 Which was no more than to discourse with him)
 Never to let him know what flame I felt ;
 Yet when I saw his tears, and heard his vows—
 Persuasive speakers for affection—
 I could not choose but open to his view

My loving heart ; yet with this caution,
 That he should ever bear respect unto
 My honour and my virgin chastity :
 Which then he vow'd, and his ambition
 Never was more than to attain a kiss,
 Which yet he hardly got. Thou seest, sweet Delia,

How willingly I dwell upon this theme.
 But can'st thou help me, now that I have open'd
 My wound unto thee ?

DEL. Alas ! I would I could
 Invent the way to cure you ; I should soon
 Apply my help : yet, stay, this day it is
 The shepherds come to Court.

SYL. 'Tis true, they come ;
 But what is that to me, if Thyrsis come not ?
 Or if he come, how shall he know me his,
 Or I enjoy his company ?

DEL. Let me alone to work out that.

SYL. Thou dream'st : thou can'st not do it.

DEL. I'll undertake it ; but how shall I know
 him

Without inquiring, which must breed suspicion ?

SYL. True, and beware thou ask ; the majesty
 Which sits upon his brow will say 'tis he—Thyrsis my love. But yet, perhaps, at this time,
 If I myself not flatter, thou shalt know him
 By his eyes cast down and folding of his arms,
 And often sighs that interrupt his words.
 For if his sorrow wears the liveries
 Which mine does for his absence, by these signs
 Thou shalt descry him.

DEL. These are silent marks :
 Yet will I not despair to find him out.

SYL. But when thou hast, what wilt thou say to
 him ?

DEL. Give me but leave to use my mother-wit.
 You would be gone together, would you not ?

SYL. Thou speak'st my thoughts: do this, and I will crown
Thy faith: thou shalt be queen instead of me.

DEL. If you could crown me with your virtues,
madam,
I should be a queen indeed; in the meantime,
As I am Delia, I'll do this business.

SYL. Do it, and when th' hast done, the god of
love
Reward thee with thine own desires for this.

DEL. Madam, withdraw; I hear your keepers coming. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

CLEANDER, EUBULUS.

Sir, you have put a bridle on my passions,
And given my soul the liberty it wish'd:
I now entreat your pardon for beginning
A thing of so great consequence without Leave and advice from you.

EUB. 'Tis well, Cleander,
It will behove you then to be reserv'd,
And lock this secret up: for 'tis no jesting
With kings, that may command our lives and fortunes:

You now perceive her, whom we call the princess,
To be your sister, and the love you bear her
Must be a brother's friendship, not a lover's
Passionate heat; but yet she must not know,
That I her father am, and you her brother:
And trust me, son, had I not seen despair
Of life in you, which this love brought you to,
I should not have reveal'd what now you know.

CLE. It was a comfort, sir, I do confess,
That came in time to rescue me from death,
So great her scorn was, and my love so violent.

EUB. Now you're at peace, I hope?

CLE. I am : but if

I be too curious in asking where

The king's son is, I shall desire your pardon :

For, sure, it were injustice to deprive

So great a prince of that which he was born to.

EUB. You are too far inquisitive ; yet because

I have engag'd you in a secret of

As great importance, this I will not hide.

The king, I told you, when his wife grew near

The time of her delivery, sent to know

Of our great oracle whether the child should be

Female or male, and what should be its fortune.

CLE. What said the oracle? have you the answer?

EUB. It only was imparted unto me,

And this it is, which I have never shown

To any but the queen. Here take and read it.

If e'er thy issue male thou live to see,

The child thou think'st is thine, thine shall not be;

His life shall be obscure : twice shall thy hate

Doom him to death. Yet shall he 'scape that fate :

And thou shalt live to see, that not long after

Thy only son shall wed thy only daughter.

This oracle is full of mystery.

EUB. It is ; and yet the king would needs interpret

That, should it prove a man-child, 'twas a bastard :

And being loth that one not of his blood,

As he conceived by this, should be his heir,

Told me in private that, if it were male,

He would not have it live ; yet, fearing most

To publish his dishonour and his wife's,

He charg'd me not reveal it unto any,

But take the child and see it made away,

And make the world believe it was still-born.

CLE. And did you so?

EUB. No, for indeed I durst not
For anything become a murderer.

CLE. How did you then?

EUB. I went unto the queen,
Show'd her the state she was in, and besought
her

To be as careful of me as I was
Of her, and we would work a better end
Than she expected. So we both agreed
That, if the child she then did labour with Proved to be a male, I should with care conceal
The birth of it, and put a female child
Instead of it, which I was to look out.
It fortun'd that your mother then was ready
To be deliver'd of your sister, and
Time and good fortune did conspire to save
The king's child and to make my daughter princess.

CLE. But what did then become of the young prince?

EUB. The queen protesting to me that it was
The king's own child, conjur'd me to preserve it,
Which as mine own I could not; for already
Many took notice that my child was female,
And therefore I was fain to publish her
As dead, and buried an empty coffin.
I rode forth with the child a full night's journey,
With purpose to deliver it to some
Plain honest man, that would be careful of it,
And not inquisitive to know whose child
It was, but give it breeding as his own:
When, being frighted with the noise of arms
Of some outlawed thieves, that did infest
The place, I made all haste I could to 'scape
'em,
Considering my charge; for that I knew,
If I were taken, though they spar'd my life,
The charge I had must needs betray me to
The king, and then I could not hope for mercy.

I laid it down there, cover'd closely o'er,
A circle 'bout his neck, wherein was writ—

Archigenes, son of Euarchus and Eudora

In characters known only to myself
And to the king, in which I us'd to clothe Secret despatches when I writ to him
From foreign states, and within the circle
I grav'd the king's less seal, which then I kept.
Some gold besides and jewels there I left,
That, whosoe'er should find him might with that Defray the charge of his education ;
Howe'er, next day I purpos'd to return
With speed, and carry it to some abode.

CLE. But did the queen know this ?

EUB. She did not,

Till my return next day : then, when I told her,
The child was thence remov'd where I had left
him.

CLE. Belike those thieves had carried him
away.

EUB. 'Tis probable.

CLE. How could the queen take this
So sad a story ?

EUB. With such impatience
That, being weak before, she shortly died.

CLE. But yet, sir, with your favour, might you not
Have made inquiry after him ?

EUB. I durst not,
For fear of being discover'd. On your life,
Take heed how you reveal this.

CLE. I am charm'd.

EUB. Then let us watch my daughter, for I fear
The flight she made was for some other end
Than for retirement, which she does pretend.

CLE. Henceforth I shall obey her as my princess,
And love her as my sister, not my mistress.

EUB. You shall do well: come, let us to the king.

SCENA III.

HYLAS, MIRTILLUS, Chorus of shepherds and shepherdesses, representing Paris, Cœnone, Venus, and the Graces.

HYL. It was my dream, and I will send it to her;
Though I myself by her too cruel sentence
Must never see her face.

MIR. What paper's that?
Love verses, as I live! What's here? a dream!
Nay, I will read 'em: therefore stand aside.

MIRTILLUS reads.

*Sleep, thou becalmer of a troubled sprite,
Which lead'st my fancy to that sweet delight
Wherein my soul found rest when thou didst show
Her shadow mine whose substance is not so,
Wrap up mine eyes in an eternal night:
For since my day springs only from that light,
Which she denies me, I account the best Part of my life is that which gives me rest.*

*And thou, more hard to be entreated than Sleep to the heated eyes of frantic men;
That thou canst make my joys essential
Which are but shadows now, be liberal,
And outdo sleep; let me not dream in vain,
Unless thou mean'st I ne'er shall sleep again.*

Alas, poor soul! will she not let thee sleep?

HYL. I knew I should be mock'd, but I'll divert him. [Aside.]

What are those thou hast brought along with thee?

MIR. The masquers, Hylas; these are they must trip it

Before the king: dost like their properties?

HYL. What, Paris and CEnone—the old story?

MIR. But newly made, and fashion'd to my purpose;

Brought hither to make good my own positions
Against the company of puling lovers;

Which if I do not, and with good effect,

Let me be one myself; and that's a torture

Worse than Apollo laid upon the satyr,

When the rude villain durst contend with him.

Look this way, Hylas; see CEnone here—

The fairest nymph that ever Ida bless'd,

Court her departing shepherd, who is now

Turning his love unto a fairer object;

And for his judgment in variety.

See how the sea-born goddess and the Graces

Present their darling Helena to him!

Be happy in thy choice, and draw a war

On thee and thine, rather than set thy heart

Upon a stale delight. Do, let her weep,

And say thou art inconstant. Be so still;

The queen of love commands it: you, that are

The old companions of your Paris here,

Move in a well-pac'd measure, that may show

The goddess how you are content for her

Fair sake to leave the honour of your woods;

But first let her and all the Graces sing

The invitation to your offering.

Venus and the Graces sing.

*Come, lovely boy, unto my court,
And leave these uncouth woods, and all
That feed thy fancy with love's gall ;
But keep away the honey and the sport.*

CHORUS. *Come unto me,
And with variety
Thou shalt be fed, which nature loves and I.*

2.

*There is no music in a voice
That is but one, and still the same :
Inconstancy is but a name
To fright poor lovers from a better choice.*

CHORUS. Come then to me, &c.

3.

*Orpheus, that on Eurydice
Spent all his love, on others scorn,
Now on the banks of Hebrus torn,
Finds the reward of foolish constancy.*

CHORUS. Come then to me, &c.

4.

*And sigh no more for one love lost :
I have a thousand Cupids here,
Shall recompense with better cheer
Thy misspent labours and thy bitter cost.*

CHORUS. Come then to me, &c.

The dance ended, enter a Messenger.

NUN. *Shepherds, if you have any pity, come
And see a woful spectacle.*

MIR. *What is't,
That can be worth the breaking of our sports ?*

NUN. The gentle nymph Nerina—

HYL. What of her?

NUN. The last of her: I think see lies a-dying,
And calls to speak with you.

HYL. Curse of your follies!

Do I live here whilst she is dying there?

MIR. But, shepherd, what disease is't that so soon

Could spend his force upon her? she was well
This morning, when she made poor Hylas sick.

MON. I know not; I am sent unto the well
Of Esculapius to fetch some water

For her recovery. I must be gone. [Exit.

MIR. Shepherds, here let us end. I think we are

Perfect in all the rest. This night the king
Must see't, resolve on that.

CHORUS. We are all ready.

MIR. Then let's away, and see what will betide
This gentle nymph Nerina.

CHORUS. We'll go with you.

SCENA IV.

CHARINUS, NERINA, DORINDA, HYLAS, MIRTILLUS, NUNTIUS.

Hold up thy head, good child: see, he is come.
Bring me the water quickly, whilst there is Some life in her. Now chafe her, good Dorinda.

NER. All is in vain, I cannot live; dear father, Farewell. What shepherd's that lies on the ground?

Is it not Hylas?

DOR. Yes, it is he, Nerina.

NER. Alas, poor shepherd! 'tis my greatest grief,

That I have grieved him ; I would beg life
For nothing but to make him satisfaction.

MIR. Hylas, what, on the ground ! look up and speak :

Alas, he's dead !

NER. It cannot be : good father,
Let me go to him, and but touch his ear,
It may be that my voice may have more virtue.

CHAR. Do what thou wilt, sweetheart : see, my poor child,

How charitable she is : being half-dead
Herself, she pities others.

MIR. Mark her finesse,
How at the brink of death she kisses him,
And took this way to mock her simple father :
O fine invention ! sure, a woman's wit
Does never fail her. [Aside.]

NER. Hylas, Hylas, speak,
Nerina calls thee ! speak to thy Nerina !

MIR. What cannot love do ? It revives the dead,

He's come to himself again !

HYL. What god is it
That has the power to return my soul
From the Elysian fields ?

MIR. It is no god :
A goddess rather, Hylas. 'Tis Nerina,
Look where she is !

HYL. Ah ! then I do not wonder
I cannot die, when my best soul comes to me :
Shall we live ever thus ?

NER. How fain I would
For thy sake, Hylas ; but it cannot be :
I feel a heavy sleep sit on my head,
And my strength fails me ; help me, sweet Dor-
inda,

Farewell for ever ! O, I die, I die !

HYL. And must I then be call'd to life again,

To see my life expire before my face ?
 You Fates, if you will take a ransom for her,
 Then take my life : but you are sure of that,
 You'll say, already ; for in her one death
 Two lives are forfeit. Nerina, gentle nymph,
 The cause why now I live, open these eyes
 Once more, and I shall flourish like those plants
 The sun gives life to : else I fall and wither,
 Leaving behind nought but a worthless stem.
 Speak to thy Hylas, sweet Nerina, speak.

CHAR. Ah me ! my daughter, hadst thou liv'd, perhaps

I might have seen thee married to Daphnis,
 Now we must see thee buried. Ah me !

NER. Hylas !

HYL. She lives ! give me some more of that—
 That water there, see now she comes again !
 O gentle Destinies, but spare this thread,
 And cut a thousand coarser ! Speak, Nerina ;
 Give me some comfort, give thy father some,
 Or else behold three lives fall in thy death.

NER. Ye Fates, that keep th' account of all our days,

Add but one minute to my life, that I
 May quit my soul of those two heavy burthens,
 Which now oppress it : dry your eyes, good father,
 Remember that the gods do send us nothing
 But for our good ; and if my journey be Shorter than yours, the less will be my trouble.
 Will you forgive me, father, that I have not Paid so much duty to you as I ow'd you ?
 Take my good-will, I pray, instead of it.

CHAR. See her good nature. Ay, child, 'tis enough,

Thou always wert obedient.

NER. Shall I dare
 To speak my thoughts, and so discharge my soul
 Of one load yet !

CHAR. Ay, do, my child; speak freely.

NER. I've heard you say that no sin was so heavy

As is ingratitude.

CHAR. 'Tis true, Nerina.

How she remembers what her father said!

NER. Then be not angry, if I now must tell you,
That this poor shepherd, whose swoll'n eyes you see Cover'd with tears, for many years now pass'd
Has courted me: but still with such a love,
So full of truth and gentle services,
That should I not requite him with my love,
I should be guilty of ingratitude.

Therefore, before I die, I pray give leave
That he may have my dying heart, which living
I still debarr'd him of. Hylas, thy hand!

O, stay a little, death: here, take thou mine,
And since I cannot live the wife of Hylas,
Yet let me die so. Sir, are you content?

CHAR. I am with anything that pleaseth thee.

NER. Tell me, are you so, Hylas?

HYL. O my love,

Ask me if I would live amongst the gods,
But ask not this. Sir, have we your consent?

CHAR. You have: it is in vain now to deny it.
You see, Dorinda, what her vow's come to!

NER. Then let me die, take me into thy arms, Sweet love, you'll see my coffin strew'd with flowers,

And you, Dorinda, will you make a garland?
I die a virgin, though I die his wife.

DOR. Alas, she's gone!

HYL. She's dead, and do I live?

CHAR. Look to the shepherd there! O my Nerina!

DOR. Vex not her soul, I pray, with often calling;

You see she's dead.

CHAR. Then there is no hope left :
Pray help us, shepherds, now to bear her hence ;
You'll come, I hope, to see her in her grave.

[Exeunt.]

ACTUS IV., SCENA 1.

THYRSIS, DELIA.

Here I am come unto a place where grief,
They say, has no abode. In princes' courts,
I've heard there is no room for love's laments :
For either they enjoy or else forget.
Thrice-happy men, to whom love gives such leave !
It may be that this place or people may
Work so with me, and melt this frozen heart :
Ah fool ! that can'st believe the change of place
Or air can change thy mind ; the love thou bear'st
Is woven so within thy thoughts, that as
Out of this piece thy Sylvia wrought for thee,
Thou can'st not take her name forth, but withal
Thou must deface the whole : so, Thyrsis, think
The wind that here may rise, or heat or rain,
Thou may'st avoid, thy love will still remain ;
And when thou diest, then may it die with thee :
Till then resolve to endure thy misery.

[Enter DELIA.]

DEL. This is the garden which I saw him go to,
And that is he ; for all the marks she gave me
To know him by he bears.

THYR. A heaviness
Weighs down my head, and would invite me to Repose myself ; I'll take the offer ; here
I'll rest awhile, for I have need of it.

DEL. How if I be deceived, and this should prove

Another man! What then? I can excuse it.
 He's laid already, and (I fear) asleep;
 I'll stay until he wake; but then suppose
 That anybody come, and take me here,
 What will they think of me? Best wake him.
 Shepherd!

It is a handsome youth: see what a grace
 Shows itself in his feature—such a face
 Might take the heart of any lady living,
 Ay, though she were a princess. Shepherd! what,
 Not yet? his sleeps are sound.

THYR. Ah Sylvia, [Speaks in his sleep.]
 Preserve thy life! O, let me die. Alas!
 I do but dream. Methought I saw myself
 Condemn'd to die, and Sylvia, to save me,
 Offer'd herself, and would needs die for me.
 'Twas a sweet shadow: let me court this dream.

DEL. He must not sleep again: shepherd, look up.

THYR. Who envies me this small repose? Indeed
 I do not often sleep: ha, who are you?

DEL. Sent to thee from thy Sylvia. Shepherd, rise,

And follow me.

THYR. Do I dream still! What are you?
 Came you from heaven, where my Sylvia is,
 And must I thither? whosoe'er you are,
 An angel or a fiend, in such a name
 You come, as I'm conjur'd to follow you:
 But I must die first. Here is to be with thee.

[Offers to stab himself.]

DEL. Stay, hold thy hand: she lives—thy Sylvia lives

To make thee happy, if thou wilt go to her.

THYR. You're habited like those I've seen at court;

And courtesy, they say, is ever there,
 Yet mingled with deceit. If you do mean

T' abuse me for your sport, this way will prove Too sad to raise mirth out of. There's no ill
 That I have done to you or any else,
 Unless my constancy be here a sin.

DEL. His griefs have made him wild. [Aside.]
 I have no time

Left me to use persuasions, or to make
 This truth apparent to you ; on my word,
 You shall be safe ; and if you dare believe me,
 I'll bring you where your love is ; follow me.

THYR. Why should I doubt, or fear to go with her ?

Ill does he call for physic whom the law
 Has doom'd to die. There's no condition
 Can prove worse to me than my present one.
 Pray, lead me where you please ; I'm sure of this :
 To one that's desperate no way's amiss. [Exeunt.]

SCENA II.

EUARCHUS, EUBULUS, CLEANDER, Attendants.

All leave the room. Eubulus, I'm resolv'd
 To hold an easier hand over my daughter
 Than I was wont : therefore I sent Cleander
 To bring her to my presence. Though she have Wrong'd her great birth and breeding by her follies,

Yet I consider that she is my daughter,
 And this restraint cannot but harden her
 In her fond resolutions. Have you sought
 By all the means you can to sift the cause
 Of her departure ?

EUB. Sir, I have tried
 By all the ways that fit a subject, to Inquire a truth of one that is his princess.

EUAR. And what have you discover'd ?

EUB. Nothing more
Than what my son Cleander did before.

EUAR. I have heard his relation : but [1] wonder How for a whole month's time she should abide Within our confines, when so great a search
Through all our countries, and loud proclamations,
Were made for her recovery.

EUB. 'Tis true.

She herein was ingenuous, and confess'd
That she foresaw what search would be made for her :

Therefore with some about her she had plotted
To hire a bark that might convey her hence
In a disguise to Smyrna, where she stay'd
Till time did fit her, that with safety
She might return in habit of a nymph
Unto the place where then Cleander found her :
But why she left the court she will not tell.

EUAR. I will not force her to't : some little time

Perhaps may make discovery of that secret.
But unto thee, my faithful councillor
(As unto one my heart hath still been open),
I will discover what my purpose is
In sending for these shepherds to my court.

EUB. I should believe they're sent for to delight

Your majesty, as they were wont.

EUAR. No, Eubulus ;

But for a greater end : I fear my daughter,
And therefore I have sent for her to see
These sports with purpose to observe her looks.
For I suspect she loves some shepherd there.

EUB. It cannot be : she will not stain her birth
With such ignoble love ; yet I confess,
Revolving all the causes of her strange
Departure, I could fix on none but that.

EUAR. Well, if she do so, I will let her forth—

Forth of my blood ; and whosoe'er he be
 Whose fortune mark'd him out to be the object
 Of this her love, shall find Ixion's fate,
 He shall embrace a shadow. By my life,
 They both shall die.

EUB. O my gracious lord,
 Remember she's your daughter !

EUAR. Ay, thou still
 Dost plead for her, but yet am I her king,
 As well as father ; private men respect
 Their profits and their private interests
 Of kindred, but the actions of a king
 To honour and renown must be directed :
 Consider that, and then thou wilt forget her.

Enter CLEANDER.

Cleander, welcome ! how does Calligone ?
 Is she not glad to come unto our presence ?
 Why dost not answer ? Art thou frighted, man ?

CLE. I know not how to answer anything,
 Unless your majesty will sign my pardon.

EUAR. Why, what's the matter ? speak, and speak it freely.

CLE. Then know, great sovereign, that, when I went

As full of joy as speed, with your glad message,
 I found the princess——

EUAR. What, not dead, I hope ?

CLE. Dead to her honour.

EUAR. Ha !

CLE. In short, my lord,

I found her walking in the garden with
 A shepherd—more of him I cannot tell ;
 But she was habited in that attire
 She wore, when from the woods I brought her home.

I slipp'd away, not being seen by them,

And if you please to go, perhaps, great sir,
You still may find them there.

EUAR. How now, Eubulus,
Are my presages true? Shall I then sleep
With this disgrace, and let my neighbour princes
Mock at my humble fortunes, when they hear
The daughter of Euarchus match'd herself
With a base shepherd? Go, Eubulus, quickly:
Here take my signet; let this be your warrant
To put them both to death.

EUB. How! both, my lord?

EUAR. Ay, both.

EUB. Your daughter too?

EUAR. Why do you question me?
Have I not said they both shall die: despatch.
Let me not see thee till they both be dead. [Exit.]

EUB. What hast thou done! thou rash, inhumane boy?

Depriv'd thy father of a child, thyself
Of thine own sister, whom but now thou knew'st?
Well may the king take that dear life away
Which he did never give: I will go tell him
I am her father: but I lose my life
If I do that, as guilty of a treason.
Go, murderer, hadst thou no pity in thee?

CLE. Sir, I do feel so much grief within me
For this my act that, if my blood will serve
To save her life, I'll make no price of it:
Yet could I not imagine that the king
Would have been so enrag'd; or if he would,
I had no time to think of it before.

EUB. No time! who bid thee hasten to the ruin
Of thy poor father and thy family?
The messages which come to do us hurt
Are speedy; but the good come slowly on.

CLE. But, sir, remember what a strait we're in:
It will concern us to invent some way

To save my sister, though the shepherd die ;
He will deserve it for his bold attempt.

EUR. Go, take thy way, whither thou wilt, thyself ;
That way is best which leads me to my grave.

[Exit.

CLE. What luck is this ? This is more haste than speed :

I am resolv'd, though my life lie at stake,
To stand the fury of th' enraged king :
Who knows but he may be as sorry for
His sudden act, as I for mine. 'Tis here
To save her, though it cost her lover dear. [Exeunt.

SCENA III.

SYLVIA, THYRSIS.

Nay, stay a little, Thyrsis ; we are safe.
My wary keepers now are with the king.

THYR. Madam, for my poor self I do not fear ;
But when I think on you, and how your name
And state, that is so eminent, must needs
Receive a certain scandal and foul blot
If we be seen together, blame me not,
Though I do fear or doubt. What cruel fate,
Angry with men, that gave us hearts alike
And fortunes so asunder ? You're a cedar,
I a poor shrub, that may look up unto you
With adoration, but ne'er reach your height.

SYL. But, Thyrsis, I do love you. Love and death

Do not much differ ; they make all things equal :
The monuments of kings may show for them
What they have been ; but look upon their dust—
The colour and the weight of theirs and beggars'
You'll find the same : and if, 'mongst living men, Nature has printed in the face of many

The characters of nobleness and worth,
 Whose fortune envies them a worthy place
 In birth or honour, when the greatest men,
 Whom she has courted, bear the marks of slaves,
 Love (sure,) will look on those, and lay aside
 'The accidents of wealth and noble blood,
 And in our thoughts will equal them with kings.

THYR. 'Tis true, divinest lady, that the souls
 Of all men are alike, of the same substance,
 By the same Maker into all infus'd ;
 But yet the several matters which they work on—
 How different they are, I need not tell you.
 And as these outward organs give our souls
 Or more or less room, as they are contriv'd,
 To show their lustre, so again comes fortune
 And darkens them, to whom the gods have given
 A soul divine and body capable
 Of that divinity and excellence.
 But 'tis the order of the Fates, whose causes
 We must not look into. But you, dear madam, Nature and fortune have conspir'd to make
 The happiest alive.

SYL. Ah me most wretched !
 What pleasure can there be in highest state,
 Which is so cross'd in love—the greatest good
 The gods can tell how to bestow on men ?

THYR. Yet some do reckon it the greatest ill,
 A passion of the mind, form'd in the fancy,
 And bred to be the worst disease of reason.

SYL. They that think so are such as love excludes :

Men full of age or foul deformity.
 No, Thyrsis, let not us profane that deity :
 Love is divine, the seed of everything,
 The cause why now we live, and all the world.

THYR. Love is divine, for if religion
 Binds us to love, the gods, who never yet
 Reveal'd themselves in anything to us

But their bright images, the fairest creatures
 Who are our daily objects ; loving them,
 We exercise religion : let us not
 Be scrupulous or fear ; the gods have care
 Of us and of our piety.

SYL. But take heed :

We cannot be too wary. Many things
 Oppose our wills ; yet, if you think it fit,
 And this night's silence will so favour us,
 We'll go together : if we quit this country,
 It is no matter : all the world to me
 Will be Arcadia, if I may enjoy
 Thy company, my love.

THYR. No, Sylvia—

Pardon me, dear, if still I call you so—
 Enjoy your fortunes ; think how much your honour
 Must suffer in this act ! For me, I find,
 It is enough that I have ever lov'd you :
 Now let me, at the light of your bright eye,
 Burn like the bird whose fires renew her nest ;
 I shall leave you behind me to the world,
 The Phoenix of true love and constancy :
 Nor is that bird more glorious in her flames,
 Than I shall be in mine, though they consume
 me.

SYL. It must not be ; for know, my dearest
 shepherd,
 I shall not tell one minute after thee ;
 I find my soul so link'd to thine, that death
 Cannot divide us.

THYR. What then shall we do ?
 Shall we resolve to live thus, till we gaze
 Our eyes out first, and then lose all our senses
 In their succession ? Shall we strive to leave
 Our souls breath'd forth upon each other's lips ?
 Come, let us practise : this our envious fates
 Cannot deny us.

Enter CLEANDER.

CLE. What a sight were this,
To meet her father? This would make him mad
Indeed, and execute his rage himself.
Madam, your father's here!

SYL. Ha, Delia!

Cleander, is it thou? then I'm betray'd
The second time; but must thy fortune make thee
The instrument of my undoing still?

CLE. Shepherd, I will not honour thee so much
As to inquire thy name: thou hast done that Thou wilt pay dear for, and I hope thy death
Will take away the blot of this disgrace
Th' hast laid upon the princess.

THYR. If you do this,
You'll make me happy: it was this I look'd for,
My trivial acts of life this of my death
Will recompense with glory; I shall die
To save my princess, and what's more, to save
The life of her life, her unspotted honour.
Bless'd lady, though you are as innocent
And chaste as purest virgins that have yet
Seen nothing in a dream to warm their blood,
Yet the malicious world, the censuring people,
That haste to cast dirt on the fairest things,
Will hardly spare you, if it once be known
That we were here together. As for me,
My life is nothing but variety
Of grief and troubles, which with constancy
I have borne yet; 'tis time that now I die,
Before I do accuse the gods, that have Brought me to this, and so pull on my death
A punishment. Will you be merciful,
And end me quickly?

CLE. Shepherd, know for this
Thy resolution, which in noble bloods
I scarce have found, I willingly would grant

What thou desir'st. But something must be known

Before that time either from you or you.

SYL. I know, Cleander, it is me you aim at :
I do confess, this shepherd is my love ;
For his sake I did leave the court and thee,
Unworthy as thou art to be his rival.

CLE. Madam, my duty bids me speak to you,
Not as a lover now, but as you are
My princess and the daughter of my king.
I would not for the world have those desires
Which I had then ; for, sure, my bolder love
Would have transgress'd the limits of all duty,
And would have dar'd to tell you that this shepherd

Was not a match for great Arcadia's heir,
Nor yet one fit for my competitor.

'Tis not his outward feature—which how fair
It is, I do not question—that can make him
Noble or wise ; whereas my birth, deriv'd
From ancient kings, and years not far unsuited
Those of your own—to these my education,
To you well known, perhaps might make me worthy
Of being your servant.

SYL. Can'st thou look on this,
This piece, Cleander, and not blush to boast
Thy follies thus, seeking to take away
From his full virtue ? If but this one act
Of his appear unto the world, as now
It shall ; for I'll not shame to publish him,
Though I die for it : will it not devour
Thy empty glories and thy puff'd-up nothings
And (like a grave) will bury all thy honours ?
Do, take his life, and glory in that act ;
But, be thou sure, in him thou shalt kill two.

CLE. What mean you, madam ?

SYL. Not to live a minute
After his death.

CLE. That all the gods forbid!

SYL. No, they command it rather, that have made

Our souls but one. Cleander, thou wert wont
To be more courteous; and I do see
Some pity in thee: if not for pity's sake,
Yet for thine own good, spare his life, and take Mine; for thou know'st, when I am dead, this kingdom

Thy father will inherit or thyself.
'Tis but the waiting of an old man's death,
Who cannot long outlive me: will you do't?

THYR. Sir, you are noble, I do see you are,
You lov'd this lady once: by that dear love—
With me it was a conjuration
To draw my soul out, whilst I was so happy—
I do beseech you spare her noble life,
Her death will sit full heavy on your soul,
And in your height of kingly dignities
Disturb that head which crowns will give no rest to.

To take my life is justice.

SYL. Rather mine;

I have offended in first loving him,
And now betraying him unto his end.

THYR. Be not so cruel, madam, to yourself
And me, to envy me a death so noble.
Sir, as you hope your love shall ever prosper,
Your great designs, your fights, whate'er they are;
As you do hope for peace in your last hour,
And that the earth may lightly clothe your ashes,
Despatch me quickly, send me to my death.

CLE. A strange contention! Madam, will you please

A little to retire: 'tis your honour
That I do strive to save, as well as life.
Pray, do not cross my purpose; I shall do Something that you may thank me for.

SYL. Cleander,
Save but the shepherd, and I'll crown thy merit.

CLE. Will you be pleas'd to enter here?

SYL. But swear
That thou wilt save him.

CLE. I shall do my best.
I dare not swear; for 'tis not in my power
To do what you command.

SYL. But will you swear
To let me know of it before he die?

CLE. I will, by heaven.

SYL. Then I take my leave.
And, Thyrsis, be thou sure, whatever fate
Attends thy life, the same does govern mine:
One kiss I must not be denied.

CLE. Fie, madam!
How low is this in you?

SYL. Then thus we part,
To meet again, I hope.

THYR. Down, stubborn heart,
Wilt thou not break yet? In my death I find Nothing that's terrible; but this farewell
Presents my soul with all the pains of hell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA IV.

MIRTILLUS, Chorus of SHEPHERDS.

1ST SHEP. I'm sorry that this business went not forward.

2D. SHEP. So am not I; we're rid of so much trouble.

1ST SHEP. Yet it is strange the king should send for us,
And when we were come, command us to return.

MIR. No, 'tis not strange; it was his will to do so.

But if you have an itch of dancing, friends,
 Next holiday we'll ha't amongst ourselves,
 And every man shall dance with his own sweet-
 heart :

What say you, shepherds? will't not be as well?

1ST SHEP. It will be very fine. But where is Thyrsis?

2D SHEP. Ay, where is he! you went along with him;

Where did you leave him?

MIR. Walking in a garden,

Where when I came to call him, he was gone.

2D SHEP. It seems he cares not for our company.

MIR. Neither for yours nor any man's besides.

1ST SHEP. He is much alter'd since his love was lost;

Methinks he's nothing like the man he was.

MIR. Well then, beware, my friends, how you engage

Yourselves in love: he is a fair example.

And Hylas too—he's drooping for his mistress:

Daphnis is mad, they say; if you've a mind

To die or to run mad, then be in love.

2D SHEP. See where he comes, in what a fume he is!

MIR. I do not like his fumes: pray let's away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENA V.

DAPHNIS. To him DORINDA.

DAPH. He will not now be found, the traitor!

But,

Where'er he be, nor heaven nor hell shall save him
 From my revenge. To take away the life
 Of that sweet innocent, without whose sight

He knew I could not live, and to do this
 Under the name of friendship! O ye gods!
 What age can parallel so great a mischief?
 This is his magic glass, which had the virtue
 To make her mine, but sent her to the gods.
 Bless'd soul, I will revenge thy death, and then I'll follow thee myself.

DOR. Daphnis, my love,
 Whither so fast?

DAPH. Now, love, deliver me;
 And must you come to trouble me? Begone!
 I cannot stay to hear thy tedious follies.

DOR. Were all your vows then made but to abuse me?

Are there not pains to punish perjur'd men?
 And will they not o'ertake you?

DAPH. 'Las, poor fool!
 The gods do laugh at such slight perjuries
 As come from lovers.

DOR. Yet it was no conquest
 To deceive one that would be credulous:
 A simple maid, that lov'd you!

DAPH. Then I see
 There is no end of women's reasoning;
 Or else this might suffice thee—that I cannot,
 No, nor I will not love thee.

DOR. Never?

DAPH. Never.

DOR. Go, cruel man, and if the god of love
 Will hear my prayers, thou in thy love shalt thrive,

As I in mine: that, when thou art forlorn,
 Thou may'st remember her thou now dost scorn.

[Exeunt.

ACTUS V., SCENA I.

HYLAS.

It was the cruel practice of my fate
 That lifted me unto the height of bliss
 To make my fall the greater : for no sooner
 Did I enjoy the love of my Nerina,
 But in a moment she was taken from me :
 A love so dearly bought with sighs and tears,
 So many years spent in the gaining her,
 And lost in one poor minute ! It is better
 Always to live a miserable life
 Than once to have been happy. She is dead,
 And I alive, that cannot live without her.
 'Tis fit that I die too ; but by what means ?
 By violence ? No, that the gods forbid.
 A ling'ring grief, I need not fear, will kill me,
 When every day I shall repair, as now,
 Unto her tomb, and consecrate my tears
 And tearing sighs unto her blessed ghost.
 Some pitying god, when I'm dissolv'd away
 Upon her ashes, will congeal those tears,
 That they may clothe her dust ; whilst some kind
 shepherd,
 Passing this way, does write this on her grave—

*See here Nerina, that from Hylas' eyes
 Fed her fair flame, now in their dew she lies.*

Thus I will have it : so the words shall run.

[Exit.

SCENA II.

DAPHNIS, ALCON, NERINA. To them HYLAS,
 MONTANUS, CHARINUS, MIRTILLUS.

DAPH. It shall not serve thy turn, malicious
 shepherd,
 Though thou hast ta'en my love away by tricks,

Yet all thy cunning and thy practices
Shall not secure thee from my revenge.

ALC. Are these the thanks I have for that rich jewel

Which I bestow'd on thee, ungrateful man ?

DAPH. Yes, for a poison'd glass—a precious jewel !

ALC. I do confess 'twas poison'd.

DAPH. Do you so ?

And, to do me a courtesy, you kill'd her.

ALC. Yet hear me, she is not dead ; and if she
be,

I'll pay my life for hers.

DAPH. Be sure thou shalt.

But can'st thou hope for such a strong illusion
To mock my sense ? Did I not see her dead ?

ALC. She did appear so : what you thought was death

Is but a lethargy ; though I profess not
To draw the moon down from the sphere she is in,
Or make the sun look bloody by my art,
Yet am I well-inform'd in everything
'This glass is made of, and I know th' effects
It works, and can discourse 'em.

DAPH. Let me hear them.

ALC, Have patience, and you shall : the glass,
you see,

Of this rare mirror which I gave you, is Made of a Memphian stone, that has the power
To bring a deadly sleep on all the senses :
With it, to make th' effects more strong, is mingled
The quintessence, extracted in a limbec,
Of the torpedo, which has such a quality
That if the fisher touch it with his hook,
A poison straight will creep through all his veins,
'Till it benumb his senses. 'This compounded,
And made into a glassy metal, soon
Reflects upon the eyes of him that looks in't

A sleepy poison, which will stupefy
 The vital parts. Yet he that gave it me
 Taught me the cordial water which he us'd
 To restore spirits and heat unto those vitals ;
 And I have brought it with me for our purpose.
 What have I wrong'd you now ? Or is my present Worthy the thanks you give me ?

DAPH. Yet you were
 To blame, that you'd not tell me this, before
 I gave it her.

ALC. In that I show'd my love ;
 For I did fear your resolution,
 Though I were certain of recovering her.

DAPH. And what must now be done ?

ALC. Here, where you found me,
 I saw her laid, and buried in the clothes
 She wont to wear—her father so would have it.
 I waited on the funeral with purpose
 To see the stone laid hollow on her grave,
 For fear of hurting her.

DAPH. It was well done.

ALC. Here I'll apply my medicine ; you shall see

Whether I lie or no.

DAPH. Let's lose no time.

I long to see my love alive again.

ALC. Then help to lift this stone ; see where she lies—

The same Nerina ?

DAPH. She is dead, I see.

ALC. Love is still full of fears : give me the water.

DAPH. Here : but take heed it do not spoil her face.

ALC. If she be dead, you need not fear the change

Of any colour. What a child is love !

DAPH. The gods, I see, will not let beauty die.

She breathes—she stirs—her eyes begin to open
As after sleep. O miracle!

ALC. How now?

Is she alive? Will you believe your sense?
Now I have put her in your hands, be sure
You do not let her go, and lose no time.
If you give credit to her words, you're lost.
What cannot women's words and flatteries Effect with simple lovers? Think on that.
Be confident: I'll leave you to your fate.

NER. Ye gods, where am I now? What place is this?

What light is this I see? Are the same things
Seen in this new world as they are in th' other?
Or in the grave do men see waters, trees,
As I do now, and all things, as I liv'd?
But (sure) I live still. If I do, why then
Was I here buried amongst these flowers?
Sure, I am dead; but yet I walk and speak,
And I have heard that those who once are dead
Can never use their voice or action.
But who is this I see here? Daphnis, ha!
Are you dead too, as well as I?

DAPH. No, sweet;

I live to be the servant of Nerina.

NER. Ay, so said Hylas, whilst I liv'd with him.

DAPH. She thinks of Hylas still: what shall I do?

NER. But tell me, Daphnis, in what place am I?

DAPH. In Daphnis' heart you live, and ever did.

NER. And so said Hylas, when we liv'd together.

DAPH. O gods, again! Nerina, think not on
him;

You must love me.

NER. Must they in this new world,
As they have chang'd their lives, so change their loves?

I never shall do that.

DAPH. You are deceiv'd :
You are not dead.

NER. Not dead ? How came I hither then ?

DAPH. By my device to keep me company.

NER. But will you not declare how I came hither ?

DAPH. Ask me not that ; but go along with
me.

NER. Stay, shepherd, whither would you have me go ?

DAPH. Where love and silence shall befriend us best.

NER. But tell me, Daphnis, was not I once
dead ?

DAPH. You were ; but I, your servant, chang'd that death

Into a sleep.

NER. I know not what you mean :
Can you change death into a sleep ?

DAPH. I can,
And did for love of you.

NER. This is a riddle :
Pray let me know what you do mean by it ?

DAPH. Come with me, and you shall.

NER. Nay, tell me first.

DAPH. Then know, fair shepherdess, that when I saw

My love, my services, my gifts, my vows,
Did all return to me without your love,
I had recourse unto this artifice :
A pleasant one of love's invention,
Which you may well remember.

NER. What was that ?

DAPH. I did present you with a looking-glass.

NER. You did, but what of that ?

DAPH. Nothing at all.

Pray, go this way with me.

NER. But tell me first.

DAPH. That cast you into this deep lethargy:
Such was the magic of it.

NER. To what purpose
Did you do this?

DAPH. To make you mine.

NER. Yours, Daphnis?

How could you hope that without my consent?

DAPH. My services, I thought, would merit it;
Besides, the world, not dreaming but you were Dead and here buried, we two might live Together, without being known to any.

NER. But could you practise tricks on those you love?

Now you are paid with your own artifice:
For know, there's none that can dispose of me
But Hylas, who has long preserv'd my heart;
And now my father, whom I did resolve
For ever to obey, has made him mine
By giving his consent, which had not been
But for this trick of yours.

DAPH. Why then it seems
You do not love me?

NER. Love you! Know, I had
Rather embrace my death again than thee.

DAPH. Then 'tis no time to dally: come along,
Or I will force you.

NER. Help me, shepherds, help!

DAPH. Fool! stop your mouth, no human help shall save thee.

Enter HYLAS.

HYL. This is the place where I am come to pay
My tears' first sacrifice upon this tomb
That glories in the spoils of all my wealth.

NER. Hylas, come help me; see'st thou not that Daphnis
Will ravish me?

HYL. Ha! what do I hear?
The voice of my Nerina! so she spake
When she did live; but now, alas! she's dead.
Some devil mocks me with a vision,
And voice unto it.

NER. Will you see me ravish'd
Before your face? O Hylas! O my love!

HYL. 'Tis she, it is no vision: hold, ravisher,
My love thou canst not take without my life.

Enter MIRTILLUS, MONTANUS, CHARINUS.

MIR. What noise is this?

MON. Some shriek much like a woman's.

NER. O, help my love, Mirtillus!

MIR. Shepherd, hold;
Let go this nymph.

DAPH. Or death or victory
Shall crown my enterprise.

CHAR. Who makes this outcry?

MIR. Sir, I shall cool you, if you be so hot.

CHAR. My daughter here! was she not buried?
Away, foul spirit, away! Let's part these shepherds.

NER. O father, do you think that I am dead?
I am alive, as you are; touch me, see.

CHAR. She is alive indeed! How cam'st thou hither?

NER. Daphnis, whom you would have to be my husband,
Brought me to this supposed death and grave.

CHAR. By what strange means, Nerina?

NER. By the glass
You bid me I should take: he has confess'd
To me that it was poison'd.

CHAR. Can it be?
Can Daphnis do this? He had little reason.

DAPH. She was a fool to cry ; I should ha' pleas'd her
 Ere this, perhaps.

CHAR. Here, Hylas, take my daughter,
 For she is thine : you, Daphnis, I did further
 In all I could, till you would find a trick
 To put yourself beside her.

NER. I forgive him :
 For though it was ill-meant, yet did it sort
 By accident unto my good.

MON. But will
 Our laws permit a ravisher to live ?

HYL. No, no, Montanus : let him live, and envy
 Our present happiness.

DAPH. Cover, you gods,
 The world in public ruin, or else show me
 A way to hide my shame.

MON. What will he do ?

MIR. He will go hang himself : what plots he had
 To fool himself with !

MON. They that practise tricks,
 Find them as jades, that throw 'em first, then kick 'em,
 As his has done.

CHAR. Come, shepherds, let's away,
 And solemnise these nuptials.

MIR. Stay, Montanus,
 Did the king send for you ?

MON. He did.

MIR. And how ?

MON. The message came from Thyrsis.

MIR. I'll go with you :
 'Tis strange the king should send for you : pray
 heaven
 Thyrsis have done no mischief there : he's handsome,

Of a good grace and moving eloquence :
 Perhaps some lady may have taken him
 Up for herself, and he, I'll lay a wager,
 Will be so squeamish that, if Sylvia
 Come in his mind, he ne'er will do her reason,
 And then her plot will be how to betray him—
 Would I were in his place !

MON. I would thou wert,
 So he were safe.

MIR. I would comply, ne'er fear it ;
 They live a heavenly life of love in court
 To that which we do here ; a mistress there
 Will satisfy the longings of her lover,
 And never trouble Hymen for the matter :
 Then, if they like not, they may look elsewhere.

MON. Thou wilt be punish'd one day for thy mischief.

MIR. The mischief's in my tongue, I ne'er do any.

MON. No, I have heard that Stella was with child

By thee, and thou must father it.

MIR. Who—I ?

Take me at that once—fathering of children,
 And make me common father of them all !
 A child's a pretty thing, and I should joy
 To see one of mine own. I'll tell thee truth, Montanus. By this hand, I never lay
 With any woman in my life.

MON. How then ?

You have courted all ; who is it that Mirtillus
 Has not profess'd to love ?

MIR. I do confess it,
 And that is all I could do ; for before
 I could get earnest of any one's love,
 To whom I made address, even she would say :
 You have another mistress, go to her,
 I will not be her stale : and so by this means,
 Nor this nor that would do me any reason.

MON. You had ill luck, it seems ; 'twas not your fault.

MIR. No, for if they would believe me, I did swear

I had no other. Pray, Montanus, tell me—
For you have known the several ways of wooing,
Which is the best and safest ?

MON. O Mirtillus,
Grey hairs have put the wilder thoughts of love
Out of my head ; cold blood and frozen limbs
Fright all those heats away, in place of which Discretion and sobriety should come.

MIR. But, I have heard, old men do sometimes
love.

MON. They doat, Mirtillus—give it the right
name ;

In old men's bloods Cupid does quench his flames.
But as we go, I'll tell thee : not to love
At all is best ; but if you needs must love,
Love one, and seek no further. Thou wilt find Enough of her, if once she prove unkind.

SCENA III.

DAPHNIS, ALCON. To DAPHNIS, DORINDA.

There is no way t' avoid the shame of this.
Each shepherd's boy, that sings unto his flock,
Will make me the scorn'd subject of his song.

ALC. Had you been sudden, as I counsell'd you,
You had not fail'd : but you young men do never Go through with anything.

DAPH. For heaven's sake,
Call not that wicked deed to my remembrance.
I do repent me that I e'er begun it :
I would not for a world have ended it :
Nerina's chaste and fair, and I a villain.

Leave me, I pray ; for something tells me you
Did first advise me to this damned act.

ALC. Nay, if you prize my friendship at this rate,
I'll leave you to your penance. [Exit.

DAPH. This old man
Is full of malice ; nothing troubles him.
The ills that he has done fly from his thoughts,
And he rejoices that he did them quaintly ;
I have begun my youth as if I meant
To have my age so punish'd as his is.

Enter DORINDA.

Who's this ? Dorinda ! I have done her wrong :
I sued for love to her first, which obtain'd,
I stuck disgraces on her ; let me ask
Forgiveness now, for 'twere too much to hope
That she should love one stain'd with such a deed
As I have done, so foul and impious.

DOR. Great love, if yet thou art not satisfied
With all the wrongs I have sustain'd for thee ;
My blood, I hope, thy anger will appease,
Which thou may'st glut thyself with.

DAPH. Gentle nymph.

DOR. I've been too gentle, do not mock me
with't :

O Daphnis ! is it you ? This is not well
To mock me thus ; your looks, when arm'd with frowns,
Gave not my heart so deep a wound as this.

DAPH. I mean no scorn ; I come to ask your pardon

For what I've done already, not to heap
More sins upon my head.

DOR. 'Tis very strange.

DAPH. But true, Dorinda ; will you spit upon
me ?

Take your revenge, for I have well deserv'd it.

DOR. But is this serious, Daphnis? O, take heed,
 Crack not my heart with such a load of grief
 And scorn, so press'd as this is: if you do,
 The gods will punish it; for though they have Neglected me thus long, they will revenge
 Such injuries as these.

DAPH. My many ills
 Discredit my repentance: if my words
 Can find no faith with you, believe my tears:
 Indeed they are not feign'd.

DOR. Even so you look'd
 When first you stole my heart: but I forgive you,
 Whate'er become of me, I still must love you.

DAPH. Forgive me first, and then I will begin
 By my endeavours and true services
 To deserve something of you, if not love.

DOR. There is not that hard-heartedness in man
 Which I did think, for he repents, I see.
 O Daphnis! if thou mean'st not this as scorn,
 Take me into thine arms, and I will be Thy slave.

DAPH. O, say not so; let me
 Rather be thine; it will be pride in me
 To be ambitious of it.

DOR. O my heart!
 What sudden joy thou strik'st into it now!
 But yet methinks I fear thou dost not love me.

DAPH. Why should you fear? By Pan, you are
 to me
 Whate'er you can imagine; equal—above
 All that I e'er thought fair; and if you be Content to hide my faults, and take me to
 Your nuptial bed, which yet I dare not hope—
 But if you will, whene'er that day shall come,
 Th' embraces of my love and me shall be
 Such, as the Cyprian boy from our abundance
 Shall take his fires to kindle other hearts,

Yet leave with us a flame which we will cherish,
And keep alive unto eternity.

DOR. Women are ever credulous—most then,
When knowledge of the truth would but afflict
them.

I dare not now distrust you, though I knew
What you have said were false : it has a semblance
Of such a pleasing truth : give me thy hand,
And take thou mine ; whilst we walk thus entwin'd,
I shall think Daphnis never was unkind. [Exeunt.]

SCENA IV.

EUBULUS, CLEANDER. To them THYRSIS, SYLVIA.

What, are they dead ? is the king's will obey'd ?

CLE. No, sir, they live, and Hymen in his bands
Has tied them both ; the happiest knot that e'er
Knit two such equal hearts and loves together.

O, I'm ravish'd with the news : my joy
Is greater now than if sh' had been the daughter Unto our king, and I had married her.

EUB. I am amaz'd ; pray Jove thou be'st not mad.

CLE. Somewhat exalted, sir, beyond myself,
But yet not mad. Go, sir, unto the king ;
Tell him Cleander lives to make him happy.

EUB. Sure, thou wilt come unto thyself anon !
Prythee, bethink thee.

CLE. Yes, sir, I do think,
And know that I have news to make him live,
And you an age yet longer.

EUB. This is strange.

CLE. 'Tis true.

EUB. But what is true ?

CLE. 'Tis true, my sister
Shall be a queen.

EUB. If she do live, I think
She will ; but yet you know we were commanded
To cut that life off.

CLE. But your hasty son,
That came so speedy with a fatal message,
Was not so forward now ; they both do live,
And both are married.

EUB. Jupiter forbid !

CLE. The Fates command it, 'tis their proper work :
The shepherd is a prince—your prince and mine,
And married to my sister.

EUB. Ha ! what's that ?
Prythee, digest thy troubled thoughts, and tell me
What prince is this thou mean'st ?

CLE. Archigenes.

EUB. Thou dream'st : it cannot be.

CLE. No ? then come forth,
You royal pair, and testify yourselves.

Enter THYRSIS and SYLVIA.

SYL. Father, your blessing.

EUB. Ha !

CLE. Nay, I've told all.
She knows she is your daughter : look, sir, here ;
Here we must place our reverence.

EUB. Who's this ?

CLE. Not yet ? Then look upon this circle, that
You know for certain, though you know not him.

EUB. 'Tis it—it is the same : Archigenes,
Son of Euarchus and Eudora :

This is my character, and this my seal.

THYR. Sir, I have heard that by your piety
My infant life was sav'd : now by the goodness, Deriv'd from you unto your son, I have
Not only found my life, but my content.
The sum of all my hopes—this lady here,
Without whose love my life had been a torment.

SYL. And I the happiest maid that ever was,
 Conducted by the power of simple love,
 Have found, in place of him I thought a shepherd,
 A princely lover.

EUB. Rise, Calligone :
 The gods are just, I see, that, favouring
 My innocence, have brought this match about.
 But say, Cleander, what fate guided thee
 To this discovery ?

CLE. Sir, should I tell you
 How many ways I cast to save my sister
 After the fatal message which I brought,
 I should be tedious, and keep you from
 What you do long to hear : in short, I soon
 Resolv'd to make away this royal shepherd :
 And knowing that, in this affair, to keep it
 Secret, despatch was needful, I commanded
 A servant, of whose faith and courage I
 Was well-assur'd, to kill him in my presence.

EUB. 'Tis strange thou shouldst be present at a murder.

CLE. 'Twas a necessity was laid upon me,
 Because I would be sure to see him dead.
 I bade him choose his death ; when manfully
 He said he car'd not how, so he might die.
 I knew to strangle him was the readiest way,
 Which death himself was ready to embrace :
 This his so noble resolution
 Did startle me from mine ; my servants' hands
 Trembled for fear,
 Presaging what a sin they were to act :
 He bade him be assur'd he would not start,
 And often call'd him to despatch him quickly.

SYL. What man could have a heart for such a deed,
 And see his face ?

CLE. The prince, before he came
 To put the fatal twist about his neck,

Besought me, as I ever hop'd for peace,
 I should preserve the princess ; this I promis'd,
 And whatsoever else he would desire.
 He answered, nothing now, but hasty death ;
 Then stripping off his doublet, I espied
 With a quick eye this golden circle here,
 When hastily I bid my servant hold,
 And let him go. He ask'd me why I stay'd ;
 I told him that about his neck was sacred.
 He would have rent it off, but I forbad it.

EUB. What did you then ?

CLE. Sir, I did well remember
 What I had heard of th' oracle and you.
 Which, with the computation of his years,
 I found agreeing to make up a truth,
 Which you before assur'd me. Then I ask'd him
 Whether he would be married to the princess
 Before he died ; he thought that I had mock'd him,
 And said I practis'd tyranny upon him.
 Then went I to my sister, and desir'd
 The same of her. In fine, I saw them both Join hands and hearts together ; but the prince
 Thought this a dream of life, which certain death
 Would wake him from, until I did assure him
 Of his great state, and that his love, whom now
 He thought to be the princess, was my sister ;
 All which I did refer unto your knowledge.

EUB. This day for ever let it holy be,
 And you, whom love has brought through deep despair
 Unto the haven of your happiness,
 Enjoy each other freely. Of you, brave shepherd,
 But now my prince, I shall inquire anon
 Where and with whom you liv'd.

THYR. Sir, the shepherd,
 Whom I call father stays without. Montanus His name is, by whose gentle hands (as he Has often told me) I was rescu'd first

From cold and death, since under his kind roof
Foster'd, and bred as his.

EUB. Go, call him in.

Enter MONTANUS, MIRTILLUS.

You're welcome both ; you may applaud your fortune

That brought you such a shepherd. Stay all here, Whilst I go to the king. This day will add
More years unto his life, when he shall say,
No day shone brighter on Arcadia. [Exit.]

MON. We are both come to do our duties to you,
I as being sent for, and Mirtillus with me,
'To celebrate your joys. Within a while,
The shepherds and the nymphs will all be here.

THYR. My old companions shall be welcome all,
As you are now ; I never shall forget
Your courtesy nor theirs.

SYL. Nor I the nymphs',
Once my dear fellows ; but you, Mirtillus,
Though you did scorn to love, yet could you sing
Well, if you listed of it.

CLE. Can shepherds then
Despise that deity which we adore ?

MIR. Madam, I reverence it in you,
The perfect'st pattern of a constant lover,
And in the honour of your nuptials
I have a song, which if your grace will hear,
'Twill entertain the time.

SYL. Let it be sung.

Song.

*Hymen, god of marriage-bed,
Be thou ever honoured :
Thou, whose torch's purer light
Death's sad tapers did affright,*

*And instead of funeral fires
Kindled lovers' chaste desires :
May their love
Ever prove
True and constant ; let not age
Know their youthful heat t' assuage.*

2.

*Maids, prepare the genial bed :
Then come, night, and hide that red,
Which from her cheeks his heart does burn ;
Till the envious day return,
And the lusty bridegroom say,
I have chas'd her fears away,
And instead
Of virgin-head,
Given her a greater good :
Perfection and womanhood.*

THYR. Thanks, good Mirtillus ; this indeed was proper Unto your subject.

MIR. Your thrice-happy match
Being but now come to my knowledge, made me
Contract myself into a straiter room
Than the large subject might afford.

CLE. The king !

To these EUARCHUS, EUBULUS.

EUAR. Although I wonder, yet I do believe thee,
My faithful councillor.

EUB. Your majesty
Has found me always real ; but this truth
The oracle's accomplishment will prove,
That did foretell their match.

EUAR. Read it, Eubulus,
Once more, and then call in my son and daughter.

EUB. *If e'er thy issue male thou liv'st to see,
The child thou think'st is thine, thine shall not be.*

EUAR. Calligone is not my child ; proceed.

EUB. *His life shall be obscure : twice shall thy hate
Doom him to death, yet shall he 'scape that fate.*

EUAR. 'Tis true, that twice I did command his death,
First thinking him a bastard, then a shepherd,
For his offence : the gods are just. Go on.

EUB. *And thou shalt live to see, that not long after
Thy only son shall wed thy only daughter.*

EUAR. This was a riddle ever till this day,
Their marriage has made it plain. Eubulus,
Call in Archigenes, and call thy daughter,
The fair Calligone, that I may pour
My blessings on them : and I long to see Those characters thou writ'st about his neck ;
That I may call him mine.

EUB. See where they are !

EUAR. Archigenes, come nearer, for thou art
A stranger yet, although thou be my son.
The character is plain, it is the same
Eubulus writ to me : ye heavenly powers,
Give me a heart that may be large enough
T' express my joy for these and thanks to you.

THYR. My royal father—for I am instructed
To call you so—if I have done amiss
In hasting to this match, I ask your pardon.

SYL. And I for daring to aspire so high
Without your leave.

EUAR. Rise both ; you have my blessing.
But who are these ?

THYR. This is the shepherd, sir,
Who took me up first, whom till now I call'd
Father, and he deserv'd it for his care.

EUAR. Eubulus, this is he ; Montanus, is it
not ?

EUR. He is deliver'd to me for the shepherd,
Of whom your majesty may, if you please,
Be well-inform'd of all those passages
I left untold.

EUR. Some other time we'll hear them :
Let him be well rewarded.

THYR. Sir, these shepherds
Are come to entertain your majesty
With their devices, as their custom is ;
In which sometimes, until my fortune chang'd,
I bore a part.

EUR. Let them be feasted all,
And study something new to celebrate
These nuptials, which I will have proclaim'd
Throughout my kingdom : and, Eubulus, see
That everything be fitted for their honour.
Come, let us to the temple, that we may
With holy sacrifice appease the gods, Whose great decrees, though we did strive to hinder,
Yet are they now fulfill'd. It is in vain
T' oppose the Fates, whose laws do all constrain.

THE EPILOGUE TO THE KING AND QUEEN.

To you, most royal pair, whose lives have brought Virtue in fashion, and the world have taught,
That chaste innocuous sports become the stage,
No less than civil manners do the age,
We dedicate this piece, but yet with fears
To have displeas'd so chaste, so tender ears ;
Which if you free us from, we'll call this play
No more the Shepherds', but our Holiday.

FUIMUS TROES: THE TRUE TROJANS.

EDITION.

Præfatus Troes, Æneid. 2. The Træ Troianes, Being a Story of the Britaines valour at the Romanes first invasion: Publikely represented by the Gentlemen Students of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford.

Quis Martem tunicâ tectum adamantinâ Dignè scripserit ?

London, Printed by I. L. for Robert Allott, and are to be sold at the signe of the Beare in Pauls-Church-yard, 1633. 4°.

INTRODUCTION.

DR JASPER FISHER, a gentleman's son, born in Bedfordshire, and entered a Commoner of Magdalen Hall in 1607, is declared by Wood¹ to be the author of this play. He afterwards took the degrees in arts, became divinity or philosophy reader of Magdalen College; rector of Wilden, Bedfordshire about 1631, and at length doctor of divinity. Besides this play he published some sermons. Oldys in his MSS. notes says he was blind. At what time he died is unknown. The title of this performance does not inform us when it was acted, nor is it spoken of as a republication.² Langbaine mentions no other edition but that of 1633, [nor is any other known, or believed to exist].

¹ "Ath. Oxon.," i. 619.

² All the acts close with songs by the Druids; and at the end of Act iii. is one in the Scottish dialect. Hence a conjecture has been hazarded, either that the author was a Scotchman, or that the song was introduced to please King James. If so, the play must have been written and represented before 1625; but there is no evidence that James was ever present when it was performed.—Collier.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MERCURY.	}	Livius, lib. 5.
FUR. CAMILLUS.
BRENNUS.
JULIUS CÆSAR.
C. VOLUSENUS.
Q. LABERIUS, alias LABIENUS.
Q. ATRIUS.
COMIUS ATREBAS.
CASSIBELANUS, imperator Britan- norum.			} Cæsar, Com. de bell. Gall., lib. 4 et 5.
MANDUBRATIUS, princeps Trino- bantum.
CINGETORIX,	} four petty kings in Kent.
CARVILIUS, TAXIMAGULUS, SEGONAX,
{ LUD, his sons	} { ANDROGEUS. TENANTIUS.
{ CASSIBELANE.
{ NENNIUS.	} Galfrid Monu- metensis, lib. 4.
BELINUS, a chief nobleman.
HIRILDAS, nephew to Cassibelane.
EULINUS, nephew to Androgeus.
CRIDOUS, king of Albania.
BRITÆEL, king of Demetia.
GUERTHED, king of Ordoricia.

NAMES FEIGNED.

LANTONUS,	} two druids, or priests.
HULACUS,
LANDORA,	} two ladies mentioned.
CORDELLA,
ROLLANO, a Belgic.

Chorus of five Bards or Poets-Laureate.
Soldiers, Shipmen, Servants.

FUIMUS TROES: THE TRUE TROJANS.

MERCURY *conducting the ghosts of BRENNUS and CAMILLUS*¹ in complete armour, and with swords drawn.

MER. As in the vaults of this big-bellied earth
Are dungeons, whips and flames for wicked ghosts ;
So fair Elysian fields, where spotless souls
Do bathe themselves in bliss.² Amongst the rest,³

¹ Brennus, king or leader of the Transalpine Gauls. He won the battle of Allia against the Romans, and in consequence of it made himself master of their city, which he entered about the year 363 from its foundation, and committed every excess which wanton barbarity could dictate. After continuing there some time, he was defeated and driven out of it by Camillus, then an exile, but created dictator on the occasion.

² So Milton, in "Comus," l. 811—

"One sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight
Beyond the bliss of dreams."

The thought is much older than Milton, and the following from Chaucer is still more apposite—

"His herte was bathed in a bath of bliss."

—"Wife of Bath's Tale."

Chaucer has nearly the same expression in his "Book of Troilus," l. 1, st. 4—

"But ye lovers that bathen in gladnesse."

—Collier.

³ See Virgil's "Æneid," bk. vi.

Two pleasant groves by two sorts are possess'd :
 One by true lovers crown'd with myrtle boughs,
 Who hand-in-hand sing pæans of their joy :
 Brave soldiers hold the second, clad in steel,
 Whose glittering arms brighten those gloomy shades,

In lieu of starry lights. From hence I bring
 A pair of martial imps,¹ by Jove's decree,
 As sticklers² in their nation's enmity.
 Furious Camillus, and, thou Briton bold,
 Great Brennus, sheathe your conquering blades.

In vain

You threaten death ; for ghosts may not be slain.

BREN. From the unbounded ocean and cold climes,

Where Charles his wain³ circles the Northern Pole,
 I first led out great swarms of shaggy Gauls
 And big-bon'd Britons. The white-pated Alps,
 Where snow and winter dwell, did bow their necks
 To our victorious feet : Rome, proudest Rome,
 We cloth'd in scarlet of patrician blood,
 And 'bout your Capitol pranc'd our vaunting steeds,

Defended more by geese,⁴ than by your gods.

¹ "Impy," says Mr Steevens (note to the "Second Part of Henry IV.," act v. sc. 5), is a Welsh word, and primitively signifies a sprout, a sucker; and by the writers of this period is almost perpetually used for progeny. So in Chalmers's translation of Erasmus's "Praise of Folie," 1549, sig. D 3: "Yet truly more pernicious was he to the common-weale, in leavyng so ungracious an ympe as Commodus was," &c.

² A stickler was a sidesman to a fencer, so called because he carried a stick, wherewith to part the combatants. See Note to "The Ordinary," [xii. 275.]

³ Seven stars in the constellation Ursa Minor.

⁴ After Brennus had taken the city of Rome, he besieged the Capitol, and in the night attempted to scale the ramparts. The attempt was rendered abortive by the cackling of some

CAM. But I cut short your fury, and my sword
 Redeem'd the city, making your huge trunks
 To fat our crows, and dung our Latian fields.
 I turn'd your torrent to another coast ;
 And what you quickly won, you sooner lost.

MER. Leave these weak brawlings. Now swift time hath spent

A Pylian age and more, since you two breath'd,
 Mirrors of Briton and of Roman valour.
 Lo, now the black imperial bird doth clasp
 Under her wings the continent ; and Mars,
 Trampling down nations with his brazen wheels,
 Fights for his nephews, and hath once more made Britons and Romans meet. To view these deeds
 I, Hermes, bring you to this upper sky ;
 Where you may wander, and with ghastly looks Incite your countrymen, when night and sleep
 Conquer the eyes : when weary bodies rest,
 And senses cease,¹ be furies in their breast.
 Never two nations better match'd ; for Jove Loves both alike. Whence then these armed bands ?

Mavors² for Rome, Neptune for Albion stands.

BREN. Then let war ope his jaws as wide as hell, geese consecrated to Juno, which were kept as sacred birds, and which being heard, gave an alarm to the garrison in time enough to save the place they defended.

¹ Generally speaking, this play was more accurately reprinted by Mr Reed than any other in the whole collection. Nevertheless, several errors crept in some of them from following the blunders of the old copy, although that is not so incorrect as many others of the same date. In a few instances the punctuation was neglected or mistaken, and such was the case with the passage in the text. It is evident that the ghosts of Camillus are to "incite their countrymen when night and sleep conquer the eyes," from scene 7 of act ii., where they work alternately upon Nennius and Cæsar, who are in "night-ropes." Till now the wrong pointing obscured the sense. See also act v., scene 2.—Collier.

² i.e., Mars.

And fright young babes ; my country-folk, more stern,

Can outlook Gorgon. Let the Fates transpos'd
Hang beaten flags up in the victor's land :

Full dearly will each pace of ground be sold,
Which rated is at dearest blood, not gold.

What ! are their ruin'd fanes, demolish'd walls,
So soon forgot ? Doth Allia yet run clear ?

Or can three hundred summers slake their fear ?

CAM. Arise, thou Julian star, whose angry beams
Be heralds to the North of war and death.

Let those black calends be reveng'd ; those ghosts,
Whose mangled sheaths, depriv'd of funeral rites,

Made the six hills promise a Cadmus' crop—
Be expiated with a fiery deluge.

Jove rules the spheres, Rome all the world beside ;
And shall this little corner be denied ?

MER. Bandy no more these private frowns ;
but haste,

Fly to your parties, and enrage their minds :

Till, at the period of these broils, I call

And back reduce you ¹ to grim Pluto's hall. [Exeunt.]

ACT I., SCENE 1.

DUKE NENNIUS ² alone.

NEN. Methinks I hear Bellona's dreadful voice
Redoubled from the concave shores of Gaul :

Methinks I hear their neighing steeds, the groans
Of complimentary souls taking their leave :

And all the dim and clamorous route which sounds

¹ Bring you back. Reduco, Lat.—Stevens.

² Dux Nennius. The leaders of armies are on this account styled Dukes by many of our ancient English translators ; as Duke Æneas, Duke Hannibal, &c.—Stevens.

When falling kingdoms crack in fatal flames.
 Die, Belgics,¹ die like men! Free minds need have Nought but the ground they fight on for their grave :

And we are next. Think ye the smoky mist
 Of sun-boil'd seas can stop the eagle's eye?²
 Or can our wat'ry walls keep dangers out,
 Which fly aloft, that thus we snorting lie,
 Feeding imposthum'd humours, to be lanc'd
 By some outlandish surgeon?
 As they are now, whose flaming towns (like beacons)

(Give us fair warning, and e'en gild our spires,
 Whilst merrily we warm us at their fires.
 Yet we are next: who, charm'd with peace and sloth,

Dream golden dreams. Go, warlike Britain, go,
 For olive-bough exchange thy hazel-bow :
 Hang up thy rusty helmet, that the bee
 May have a hive, or spider find a loom :
 Instead of soldiers' fare and lodging hard
 (The bare ground being their bed and table), lie
 Smother'd in down, melting in luxury :
 Instead of bellowing drum³ and cheerful flute,
 Be lull'd in lady's lap with amorous lute.
 But as for Nennius, know, I scorn this calm :
 The ruddy planet at my birth bore sway,

¹ [Natives of Gallia Belgica, a province comprising the Duchy of Treves, part of Luxembourg, and the departments of the Meuse, Moselle, Meurthe, and Vosges. Hazlitt's "Classical Gazetteer," 1851, p. 71.]

² The same turn of thought occurs in Mr Gray's celebrated ode called "The Bard"—

"Think'st thou yon sanguine cloud, Raised by thy breath, has quench'd the orb of day?"

—Stevens.

³ Imitated from the first speech of Gloster in "King Richard III."

(Sanguine) adust my humour ; and wild-fire
 (My ruling element), blood and rage, and choler,
 Make up the temper of a captain's valour. [Exit.]

SCENE II.

JULIUS CÆSAR, COMIUS VOLUSENUS, LABERIUS ;
Soldiers, with ensign, a two-necked eagle displayed sable, drum, ancient, trumpet. A flourish.

CÆS. Welcome thus far, partners of weal and woe,
 Welcome, brave bloods ! Now may our weapons
 sleep,
 Since Ariovist in cock-boat basely flies ;¹
 Vast Germany stands trembling at our bridge,²
 And Gaül lies bleeding in her mother's lap.
 Once the Pellæan duke did eastward march,³
 To rouse the drowsy sun, before he rose,
 Adorn'd with Indian rubies : but the main
 Bade him retire. He was my type. This day
 We stand on Nature's western brink ; beyond,
 Nothing but sea and sky. Here is nil ultra.
 Democritus, make good thy fancy ; give me
 More worlds to conquer, which may be both seen
 And won together. But methinks I ken
 A whitish cloud kissing the waves, or else
 Some chalky rocks surmount the barking flood.
 Comius, your knowledge can correct our eyes.

¹ " In his fuit Ariovistus, qui naviculam deligatam ad ripam nactus ea profugit."—Cæsar "De Bello Gallico," lib. i. s. 53.

² See Cæsar "De Bello Gallico," lib. iv., s. 17, for an account of this bridge over the Rhine.

³ Alexander the Great. Pella was a city of Macedon, where he was born.

COM. It is the Britain shore, which ten leagues
hence
Displays her shining cliffs unto your sight.

CÆS. I'll hit the white.¹ That sea-mark for our ships

Invites destruction, and gives to our eye
A treacherous beck. Dare but resist, your shore
Shall paint her pale face with red crimson gore.

COM. Thus much I know, great Cæsar—that they lent

Their secret aid unto the neighbour Gauls ;
Fostering their fugitives with friendly care :
Which made your victory fly with slower wing.

CÆS. That's cause enough. They shall not henceforth range

Abroad for war ; we'll bring him to their doors.
His ugly idol shall displace their gods,
Their dear Penates, and in desolate streets Raise trophies high of barbarous bones, whose stench

May poison all the rest. I long to stride
This Hellespont, or bridge it with a navy,
Disclosing to our empire unknown lands,
Until the arctic star for zenith stands.

LAB. Then raise the camp, and strike a dreadful march,

And unawares pour vengeance on their heads.
Be like the winged bolt of angry Jove,
Or chiding torrent, whose late-risen stream
From mountains' bended top runs raging down,
Deflow'ring all the virgin dales.

CÆS. First, let's advise ; for soon to ruin
come

Rash weapons, which lack counsel grave at home.

LAB. What need consulting where the cause is plain ?

¹ A term in archery.

CÆS. The likeliest cause without regard proves vain.

LAB. Provide for battle, but of truce no word.

CÆS. Where peace is first refus'd, should come the sword.

LAB. But 'tis unlike their self-presuming might Will curbed be with terms of civil right.

CÆS. 'Tis true : yet so we stop the people's cry.
When we propose, and they do peace deny.

We'll therefore wise ambassadors despatch,
Parents of love, the harbingers of leagues ;
Men that may speak with mildness mix'd with courage,

Having quick feet, broad eyes, short tongues, long ears,

To warn the British court.

And further view the ports, fathom the seas,
Learn their complotments, where invasion may
Be soonest entertain'd. All this shall lie
On Volusene, a legate and a spy.

VOL. My care and quickness shall deserve this kindness.

Meantime unite, and range your scatter'd troops :
Embark your legions at the Iccian shore,
And teach Erynnis' swim, which crawl'd before.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

CASSIBELANUS, ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS, BELINUS, Attendants.

CAS. Although the people's voice constrains me hold

¹ Erynnis is the common name of the sister Furies, but is frequently used by the poets for mischief in general.—Steevens.

This regal staff, whose massy weight would bruise

Your age and pleasures; yet this, nephews,
know,

Your trouble less, your honour is the same,

As if you wore the diadem of this isle.

Meanwhile, Androgeus, hold unto your use

Our lady-city Troynovant,¹ and all

The toll and tribute of delicious Kent;

Of which each quarter can maintain a king.

Have you, Tenantius, Cornwall's dukedom large,

Both rich and strong in metals and in men.

I must to Verulam's fenc'd town repair,

And as protector for the whole take care.

AND. My heart agrees. Henceforth, ye sovereign cares,

State mysteries, false graces, jealous fears,

The linings of a crown, forsake my brain:

These territories neither are too wide

To trouble my content, nor yet too narrow

To feed a princely train.

TEN. All thanks I render: your will shall guide ours;

With treble-twisted love we'll strive to make

One soul inform three bodies, keeping still

The same affections both in good and ill.

Now am I for a hunting-match. Yon thickets

Shelter a boar, which spoil's the ploughman's hope:

Whose jaws with double sword, whose back is arm'd

With bristled pikes; whose fumo inflames the air,

And foam besnows the trampled corn. This beast
I long to see come smoking to a feast.

[Exit TENANTIUS.]

¹ The ancient name of London.

Enter ROLLANO.

BEL. Here comes my Belgic friend, Landora's servant.

What news, Rollano, that thy feet so strive
To have precedence of each other? Speak!
I read disturbed passions on thy brow.

ROL. My trembling heart quivers upon my tongue,

That scarce I can with broken sounds vent forth
These sad, strange, sudden, dreary, dismal news.
A merchant's ship arriv'd tells how the Roman,
Having run Gaul quite through with bloody arms,

Prepares for you : his navy, rigg'd in bay,
Only expects a gale. Farther, they say
A pinnace landed from him brings command
Either to lose your freedom or your laud.

CAS. And dares proud Cæsar back our untam'd surges!

Dreads he not our sea-monsters, whose wild shapes

Their theatres ne'er yet in picture saw?
Come, sirs, to arms! to arms! Let speedy posts
Summon our petty kings, and muster up
Our valorous nations from the north and west.
Androgeus, haste you to the Scots and Picts,
Two names which now Albania's kingdom share:
Entreat their aid, if not for love, yet fear!
For new foes should imprint swift-equal fear
Through all the arteries of this our isle.
Belinus, thy authority must rouse
The vulgar troops within thy¹ special charge.
Fire [all] the beacons, strike alarums loud;
Raise all the country 'gainst this common foe.

¹ [Old copy, my.]

We'll soon confront him in his full career :
This news more moves my choler than my fear.

[Exeunt.]

ROLLANO alone.

ROL. I am by birth a Belgic, whence I fled
To Germany for fear of Roman arms :
But when their bridge bridled the stately Rhine,
I soon return'd, and thought to hide my head
In this soft halcyon's nest, this Britain isle.
And now, behold, Mars is a-nursing here,
And 'gins to speak aloud.
Is no nook safe from Rome ? Do they still haunt
me ?
Some peaceful god transport me through the air,
Beyond cold Thule¹ or the sun's bedchamber,
Where only swine or goats do live and reign.
Yet these may fight. Place me where quiet peace
Hushes all storms ; where sleep and silence dwell,
Where never man nor beast did wrong the soil,
Or crop the first-fruits, or made so much noise
As with their breath. But, foolish thoughts, adieu :
Now catch I must, or stand or fall with you. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.

EULINUS, HIRILDAS.

EUL. The court a wardrobe is of living shapes :
And ladies are the tissue-spangled suits,

¹ There is no place oftener mentioned by the ancients than Thule, nor any one about the situation of which there has been a greater variety of opinions. Sir Robert Sibbald, in the additions to Camden, has given a discourse concerning the Thule of the ancients, in which the sentiments of different writers on this subject are considered, and many of them refuted. Camden supposes Shetland to be the place so often distinguished by the name of Thule ; and Bishop Gibson appears to agree with him in the conjecture. See Camden's "Britannia," vol. ii. p. 411, edit. 1772.

Which Nature wears on festival high days.
 The Court a spring : each madain is a rose.
 The Court is heaven, fair ladies are the stars.¹

HIR. Ay, falling stars.

EUL. False echo, don't blaspheme that glorious sex,

Whose beauteous rays can strike rash gazers blind.

HIR. Love should be blind.

EUL. Pray leave this cynic humour, whilst I sigh

My mistress' praise. Her beauty's past compare :

O, would she were more kind, or not so fair !
 Her modest smiles both curb and kindle love.
 The court is dark without her : when she rises,
 The morning is her handmaid, strewing roses.
 About love's hemisphere. The lamps above
 Eclipse themselves for shame to see her eyes, Outshine their chrysolites, and more bless the skies

Than they the earth.

HIR. Give me her name.

EUL. Her body is a crystal cage, whose pure

Transparent mould, not of gross elements
 Compacted, but th' extracted quintessence
 Of sweetest forms distill'd ; whose graces bright
 Do live immur'd, but not exempt from sight.

HIR. I prythee, speak her [name].

EUL. Her model is beyond all poets' brains
 And painters' pencils : all the lively nymphs,
 Syrens, and Dryads are but kitchen-maids,

¹ So in Shakespeare's "King Henry VIII."—

"These are stars indeed,
 And sometimes falling ones"

—Stevens.

If you compare. To frame the like Pandore,¹
The gods repine, and nature would grow poor.

HIR. By love, who is't? hath she no mortal
name?

EUL. For here you find great Juno's stately front,
Pallas' grey eye, Venus her dimpled chin,
Aurora's rosy fingers, the small waist
Of Ceres' daughter, and Medusa's hair,
Before it hiss'd.

HIR. O love, as deaf as thou art blind! Good
Eulinus,
Call home thy soul, and tell thy mistress' name.

EUL. O strange! what, ignorant still! when as so plainly

These attributes describe her? Why, she is
A rhapsody of goddesses; the elixir
Of all their several perfections. She is (Now bless your ears!) by mortals call'd Landora.

HIR. What! Landora, the Trinobantic lady?
How grow your hopes? what metal is her breast?

EUL. All steel and adamant. 'Tis beauty's pride to stain

Her lily white with blood of lovers slain,
Their groans make music, and their scalding sighs
Raise a perfume, and vulture-like she gnaws
Their bleeding hearts. No gifts, no learned flattery,

No stratagems, can work Landora's battery.
As a tall rock maintains majestic state,
Though Boreas gallop on the tottering seas,
And tilting split his froth out, spurning waves
Upon his surly breast; so she resists,
And all my projects on her cruel heart
Are but retorted to their author's smart.

¹ Pandora was a woman formed by Vulcan, with the joint contribution of all the gods, every one of whom bestowed on her some grace or beauty.—Stevens.

HIR. Why, then, let scorn succeed thy love :
and bravely
Conquer thyself, if thou wilt conquer her :
Stomachs with kindness cloy'd disdain must stir.

EUL. Most impious thoughts ! O, let me rather perish,
And loving die, than living cease to love :
And when I faint, let her but hear my cry.
Ah me ! there's none which truly loves, but I.

HIR. O ye cross darts of Cupid ! this very lady.
This lady-wasp woos me, as thou dost her,
With glances, jewels, bracelets of her hair,
Lascivious banquets and most eloquent eyes :
All which my heart misconstrues as immodest,
It being pointed for another pole.
But hence learn courage, coz. Why stand you dumb ?

Women are women, and may be o'ercome.

EUL. Your words are earwigs to my vexed brain ;
Like henbane juice or aconite diffus'd,
They strike me senseless.
My kinsman and Hirildas, to my end ;
But I'll ne'er call you councillor or friend.
Adieu.

HIR. Stay, stay. For now I mean with gentler breath¹
To waft you to your happy landing-place.
Seeing this crocodile pursues me flying,
Flies you pursuing, we'll catch her by a trick.
With promise feign'd I'll 'point a Cupid's stage,
But in the night and secret, and disguis'd,
Where thou, which art myself, shalt act my part.
In Venus' games all cosening goes for art.

¹ In the old copy the four last letters of breath have dropped out by accident, but they are no doubt rightly restored.—Collier.

EUL. Bless'd be these means, and happy the success!

Now 'gin I rear my crest above the moon,
And in those gilded books read lectures of
The feminine sex. There moves Cassiope, Whose garments shine with thirteen precious stones,

Types of as many virtues : then her daughter,
Whose beauty without Perseus would have tam'd
The monstrous fish, glides with a starry crown :
Then just Astrea kems her golden hair :
And my Landora can become the skies
As well as they. O, how my joys do swell !
He mounted not more proud whose burning throne
Kindled the cedar-tops, and quaff'd whole fountains,

Fly then, ye winged hours, as swift as thought
Or my desires : let day's bright waggoner
Fall headlong, and lie buried in the deep,
And (dormouse-like) Alcides night outsleep :
Good Tethys, quench his beams, that he ne'er rise
To scorch the Moors, to suck up honey-dews,
Or to betray my person.

But prythee, tell what mistress you adore ?

HIR. The kind Cordella, loving and belov'd :
Only some jar of late about a favour
Made me inveigh 'gainst women. Come away,
Our plots desire the night, not babbling day.

EUL. We must give way : here come our reverend bards

To sing in synod, as their custom is
With former chance comparing present deeds.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.

Chorus of five Bards-Laureate, four Voices, and a Harper ; attired.

1. Song.

1. At the spring	Flut, acute ;
Birds do sing :	And salute,
Now with high,	The sun, born
Then low cry.	Every morn.

ALL. *He's no bard that cannot sing
The praises of the flow'ry spring.*

2. Flora queen,	3. Woods renew
All in green,	Hunter's hue.
Doth delight	Shepherd's grey
To paint white,	Crown'd with bay,
And to spread	With his pipe
Cruel red	Care doth wipe,
With a blue,	Till he dream
Colour true.	By the stream.

ALL. He's no bard, &c. ALL. He's no bard, &c.

4. Faithful loves,	5. Pan doth play
Turtle-doves,	Care away.
Sit and bill	Fairies small,
On a hill.	Two foot tall,
Country swains	With caps red
On the plains	On their head,
Run and leap,	Dance around
Turn and skip.	On the ground,

ALL. He's no bard, &c. ALL. He's no bard, &c.

6. Phyllis bright,	Rocks doth move
Clot'd in white,	With her love,
With neck fair,	And make mild
Yellow hair,	Tigers wild.

ALL. *He's no bard that cannot sing
The praises of the flow'ry spring.*

2d Song.

*Thus spend we time in laughter,
While peace and spring do smile ;
But I hear a sound of slaughter
Draw nearer to our isle.*

*Leave then your wonted prattle,
The oaten reed forbear ;
For I hear a sound of battle,
And trumpets tear the air.*

*Let bagpipes die for want of wind,
Let crowd¹ and harp be dumb :
Let little tabor come behind :
For I hear the dreadful drum.*

*Let no birds sing, no lambkins dance,
No fountains murmuring go :
Let shepherd's crook be made a lance.
For the martial horns do blow. [Exeunt.*

ACT II., SCENE 1.

CASSIBELANUS, CRIDOUS, BRITAEI, GUERTHED,
NENNIUS, BELINUS, EULINUS. VOLUSENUS following.

CAS. Heavens favour Cridous, fair Albania's
king :
And Britael, deck'd with the Demetian crown :
The same to famous Guerthed, whose command
Embraces woody Ordovic's black hills.
Legate, you may your message now declare.

¹ [Fiddle.]

VOL. By me great Cæsar greets the Briton state :
This letter speaks the rest.

CAS. Then read the rest.

VOLUSENUS reads.

“ Cæsar, Proconsul of Gallia, to Cassibelane, King of Britain.

Since Romulus' race by will of Jove
Have stretch'd their empire wide
From Danube's banks (by Tigris swift)
Unto Mount Atlas' side :
And provinces and nations strong
With homage due obey ;
We wish that you, hid in the sea,
Do likewise tribute pay.
Submitting all unto our wills
For rashly aiding Gaul :
And noble lads for hostages
Make ready at our call.
These granted may our friendship gain ;
Denied shall work your woe.
Now take your choice, whether you'd find
Rome as a friend or foe.”

CAS. Bold mandates are unwelcome to free princes.

Legate, withdraw ; you shall be soon despatch'd.

[Exit VOLUSENUS.]

CRI. He writes more like a victor than a foe ;
Whose greatness, risen from subdued nations,
Is fasten'd only with fear's slippery knot.
Nor can they fight so fierce for wealth or fame,
As we for native liberty. With answer rough Bid him defiance. So thinks Cridous.

GUER. Guerthed maintains the same, and on their flesh

I'll write my answer in red characters.

BRI. Thou ravenous wolf, imperious monster,
 Rome,
 Seven-headed Hydra, know, we scorn thy threats :
 We can oppose thy hills with mounts as high,
 And scourge usurpers with like cruelty.
 And thus thinks Britael.

EUL. Let Cæsar come : our land doth rust with ease,
 And wants an object, whose resisting power
 May strike out valorous flashes from her veins.
 So shadows give a picture life : so flames
 Grow brighter by a fanning blast. Nor think
 I am a courtier and no warrior born,
 Nor love object ; for well my poet says :¹
Militat omnis amans, each lover is a soldier :
 I can join Cupid's bow and Mars his lance.
 A pewter-coat fits me as well as silk.
 It grieves me see our martial spirits trace
 The idle streets, while weapons by their side
 Dangle and lash their backs, as 'twere to upbraid
 Their needless use. Nor is it glory small
 They set upon us last, when their proud arms
 Fathom the land and seas, and reach both poles.
 On, then ; so great a foe, so good a cause,
 Shall make our name more famous. So thinks Eulinus.

CAS. Then, friends and princes, on this blade take oath,²

First to your country to revenge her wrongs ;
 And next to me, as general, to be led
 With unity and courage. [They kiss the sword.]

ALL. The gods bless Britain and Cassibelane.

NEN. Now, royal friends, the heirs of mighty Brute,
 You see what storm hangs hovering o'er this land,

¹ Ovid.—Stevens.

² [An usual form in ancient times.]

Ready to pour down cataclysms¹ of blood :
 Let ancient glory then inflame your hearts.
 Beyond the craggy hills of grim-fac'd Death,
 Bright Honour keeps triumphant court, and deeds
 Of martial men live there in marble rolls.
 Death is but Charon to the fortunate isles ;
 Porter to Fame.

What though the Roman, arm'd with foreign spoil,
 Behind him lead the conquer'd world, and hope
 To sink our island with his army's weight :

Yet we have gods and men and horse to fight,
 And we can bravely die. But our just cause,
 Your forward loves, and all our people edg'd
 With Dardan² spirit and the powerful name
 Of country, bid us hope for victory.

We have a world within ourselves, whose breast
 No foreigner hath unrevenged press'd
 These thousand years. Though Rhine and Rhone can serve,

And envy Thames his never captive stream,
 Yet maugre all, if we ourselves are true,
 We may despise what all the earth can do.³

¹ Delugea. — Steevens.

² [Allusively to the fabled descent of the Britons from the Trojans.]

³ The same sentiment is introduced by Shakespeare into "King John," act v. sc. 7—

" This England never did, nor never shall,
 Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror.
 But when it first did help to wound itself ;
 Now these her princes are come home again,
 Come the three corners of the world in arms,
 And we shall shock them : nought shall make us rue,
 If England to itself do rest but true."

Again, in the old play of " King John," 1591—

" If England's Peers and People join in one, Nor Pope, nor France, nor Spain can do them wrong."

The same sentiment is in Borde's "Book of the Introduction of Knowledge," sig. A 4 : "They (i.e., the English) fare sumptuously, God is served in their churches devoutly, but treason and deceit among them is used craftily,

CAS. Let's then dismiss the legate with a frown :
 And draw our forces t'ward the sea, to join
 With the four kings of Kent, and so affront¹
 His first arrival. But, before all, let
 Our priests and Druids, in their hallow'd groves,
 Propitiate the gods, and scan events
 By their mysterious arts. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

EULINUS, HIRILDAS, ROLLANO.

HIR. Well, so : your tongue's your own, though drunk or angry.

ROL. Umh ! [Seals his mouth.]

HIR. Speak not a word, upon your life : be dumb.

ROL. Umh ! [Gives him money.]

HIR. I'll winch up thy estate. Be Harpocrates.²

ROL. Umh !

HIR. Thy fortunes shall be double-gilt. Be midnight.

ROL. Umh !

HIR. An excellent instrument, to be the bawd
 To his dear lady ! But, Rollano, hark ;
 What words, what looks did give my letter welcome ?

ROL. Umh !

y^e more pitie, for yf they were true wjthin themselves. thei nede not to feare, although al nations were set against them, speciali now, consydering our noble prince (i.e., Henry VIII.) hath and dayly dothe make noble defences as castels," &c.

¹ See note to "Cornelia," [v. 211.]

² A metaphor, from engines by which weights are raised or winched up. Harpocrates was the god of silence.

HIR. Nay, now thy silence is antedated : speak.

ROL. Umh !

HIR. I give thee leave, I say. Speak, be not foolish.

ROL. Then, with your leave, she us'd, upon receipt,

No words, but silent joy purpl'd her face ;
And seeing your name, straight clapp'd it to her heart,

To print there a new copy ; as she'd say,
The words went by her eyes too long a way.

HIR. You told her my conditions, and my oath
Of silence, and that only you be used ?

ROL. All, sir.

HIR. And that this night——

ROL. Ay, sir.

HIR. You guard the door——

ROL. Ay, sir.

HIR. But I ne'er mean to come.

ROL. No, sir ? O wretch !

Shall I deceive, when she remains so true ?

HIR. No. Thou shalt be true, and she remain deceiv'd.

I'll lie, and yet I will not lie. My friend
Eulinus, in my shape, shall climb her bed,
This is the point. You'll promise all your aid ?

ROL. Your servant to command, and then reward.

EUL. We'll draw thee, meteor-like, by our warm favour,

Unto the roof and ceiling of the court :
We'll raise thee (hold but fast) on fortune's ladder. [Exit ROLLANO.]

This fellow is a medley of most lewd
And vicious qualities : a braggart, yet a coward ;
A knave, and yet a slave : true to all villany,
But false to goodness. Yet now I love him,
Because he stands just in the way of love.

HIR. Coz, I commend you to the Cyprian queen,

Whilst I attend Diana in the forest :
My kinsman Mandubrace and I must try
Our greyhounds' speed after a lightfoot hare.

[Exit HIRILDAS.

EUL. O love! whose nerves unite in equal bonds

This massy frame! thou cement of the world!
By which the orbs and elements agree,
By which all living creatures joy to be,
And dying live in their posterity.
Thy holy raptures warm each noble breast,
Sweetly inspiring more soul. Thy delight
Surpasses melody, nectar, and all pleasures
Of Tempe, and of Tempe's eldest sister,
Elysium: a banquet of all the senses!
By thy commanding power gods into beasts,
And men to gods, are chang'd, as poets say;
When sympathy rules, all like what they obey.
But love triumphs when man and woman meet
In full affection; double vows then fill
His sacred shrine. Yet this to me denied
More whets my passion: mutual love grows cold.
Venus, be thou propitious to my wiles,
And laugh at lovers' perjuries and guiles. [Exit.

SCENE III.

LANTONUS, HULACUS, *two Druids, in long robes;
hats like pyramids, branches of mistletoe.*

LAN. That souls immortal are, I easily grant;
Their future state distinguish'd—joy or pain,
According to the merits of this life.
But then, I rather think, being free from prison
And bodily contagion, they subsist

In places fit for immaterial spirits ;
 Are not transfus'd from men to beasts, from beasts
 To men again—wheel'd round about by change.

HUL. And were it not more cruel to turn out Poor naked souls stripp'd of warm flesh (like landlords),

Bidding them wander ? then forsooth imagine
 Some unknown cave or coast, whither all the myriads

Of souls deceas'd are shipp'd¹ and thrust together.

Nay, reason rather says, as at one moment
 Some die, and some are born, so may their ghosts
 Without more cost serve the succeeding age :

For (sure) they don't wear to be cast aside,
 But enter straight less or more noble bodies,
 According to desert of former deeds :

The valiant into lions ; coward minds

Into weak hares ; th' ambitious into eagles

Soaring aloft ; but the perverse and peevish
 Are next indeniz'd² into wrinkled apes,

Each vice and virtue wearing seemly shapes.

LAN. So you debase the gods' most lively image,

The human soul, and rank it with mere brutes,
 Whose life, of reason void, ends with their sense.

Enter BELINUS.

BEL. Hail to heaven's privy councillors ! The king

Desires your judgment of these troublesome times.

LAN. The gods foretold these mischiefs long ago.

¹ [Old copy, slipt].

² I suppose this word is compounded from denizen, i.e., one made free, and here very licentiously employed.—
Steevens.

In Eldell's reign the earth and sky were fill'd
 With prodigies, strange sights, and hellish shapes :
 Sometimes two hosts with fiery lances met,
 Armour and horse being heard amid the clouds :
 With streamers red now march these airy warriors,

And then a sable hearse-cloth wraps up all ;
 And bloody drops speckled the grass, as falling
 From their deep-wounded limbs :
 Whilst staring comets ¹ shook their flaming hair.
 Thus all our wars were acted first on high,
 And we taught what to look for.

HUL. Nature turns stepdame to her brood, and dams

Deny their monstrous issue. Saturn, join'd In dismal league with Mars, portends some change.

Late in a grove, by night, a voice was heard
 To cry aloud, Take heed : more Trojans come !
 What may be known or done, we'll search, and help

With all religious care.

BEL. The king and army do expect as much :
 That powers divine, perfum'd with odours sweet,
 And feasted with the fat of bulls and rams,
 Be pleas'd to bless their plots.

LAN. All rites and orisons due shall be perform'd :

Chiefly night's empress fourfold honour craves,
 Mighty in heaven and hell, in woods and waves.

[Exeunt.]

¹ So in Milton's "Paradise Lost," bk. ii. l. 706—

"Incens'd with indignation Satan stood Unterrify'd, and like a comet burn'd,
 That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
 In th' arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
 Shakes pestilence and war."

SCENE IV.

CÆSAR, VOLUSENUS, LABERIUS, Soldiers.

CÆS. What land, what people, and what answer,
show.

VOL. We saw a paradise, whose bosom teems
With silver ore, whose seas are paved with pearl,
The meadows richly spread with Flora's tapestry;
The fields even wonder at their harvest-loads :
In crystal streams the scaly nations play,
Fring'd all along with trembling poplar trees.
The sun in summer, loth to leave their sight,
Forgets to sleep, and glancing makes no night.
Then, for the men, their stature's tall and big.
With blue-stain'd skins and long black dangling hair, Promise a barbarous fierceness. They scarce
know,
And much less fear our empire's might : but thus Return'd defiance :—

“ Cassibelane, King of Britain, to Julius Cæsar,¹ Proconsul of Gallia.

Seeing your empire's great, why should it not suffice ?
To covet more and more is tyrants' usual guise.
To lose what Jove you gave, you'd think it but unjust ;
You have your answer then ; defend this isle we must :
Which from the world cut off, and free from her first day,
Hath iron more for swords than gold for tribute's pay.

¹ See the letter printed in Geoffrey of Monmouth's History, bk. iv. c. 2.

If amity and like fear succour to Gaul imparts, Pardon, for this small brook could not divide our hearts.

We hope the gods will help, and fortune back our cause,

Who take arms but to keep our lives, our wives, and laws.

As you from Troy, so we our pedigree do claim ;
Why should the branches fight when as the root's
 the same ?

Despise us not because the sea and north us close ;
Who can no farther go, must turn upon their foes.
Thus rudely we conclude : wage war, or change your will,

We hope to use a lance far better than a quill."

CÆS. I grieve to draw my sword against the stock
Of thrice-renowned Troy ; but they are rude,
And must be frighted, ere we shall be friends.
Then let's aboard, and (hoisting sails) convey
Two legions over ; for I long to view
This unknown land and all their fabulous rites ;
And gather margarites¹ in my brazen cap.
Nature nor fates can valorous virtue stop.

LAB. Now Cæsar speaks like Cæsar : stronger and stronger,
Rise like a whirlwind ; tear the mountain's pride ;
Shake thy brass harness, whose loud clattering may Waken Gradivus,² where he sleeps on top
Of Hæmus, lull'd with Boreas' roaring base,
And put to flight this nation with the noise.
A fly is not an eagle's combatant,
Nor may a pigmy with a giant strive. [Exeunt.

¹ Pearls. In 1596 Tho. Lodge published a pamphlet, entitled, "A Margarite of America."

² Mars.

"Gradivumque patrem Geticis qui præsidet arvis."

— Virgil, Æneid, iii. 35.

SCENE V.

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS ; COMIUS following. Attendants.

COM. Health and good fortune on Cassibelane 'tend :

My love to you and Britain waft me hither
To make atonement, ere the Roman leader
Bring fire and spoil, and ruin on your heads.
No herb can ever grow where once he treads :
Nothing withstands his force. Be not too hardy.
But buy a friend with kindness, lest you buy
His anger dearly.

CAS. Comius, speak no more : he knows our mind.

COM. O, let not rage so blind your judgment,
but

Prevent with ease the hazard of a war,
Of war, a word compos'd of thousand ills.
O, be not cruel to yourselves ! I'll undertake
Without discredit to appease his wrath,
If you'll cashier your soldiers, and receive
Him like a guest, not like an enemy.

CAS. False-hearted Gaul, dar'st thou persuade e'en me

For to betray my people to the sword ?
Now know I thou art sent for to solicit
Our princes to rebel, to learn our strength.
Lay hands on him ! a spy !

ALL. A spy ! a spy ! a traitor and a spy !

[They chain him.]

COM. Is this the guerdon¹ of my loving care ?
You break the laws of nature, nations, friends.
But look for due revenge at Cæsar's hand.

¹ Reward.

CAS. Expect in prison thy revenge. Away with him!

[Exit COMIUS.]

Belinus, have you muster'd up our forces?

BEL. Yes, if it please your highness.

CAS. And what are the particulars?

BEL. First Cridous leads from the Albanian realm,

Where Grampius' ridge divides the smiling dales,
Five thousand horse and twenty thousand foot,
Three thousand chariots mann'd. The Brigants
come,

Deck'd with blue-painted shields, twelve thousand strong;

Under the conduct of Demetia's prince March twice three thousand, armed with pelts¹ and glaves;²

Whom the Silures flank, eight thousand stout,
Greedy of fight, born soldiers the first day,
Whose grey-goose winged shafts ne'er flew in vain.
Then Guerthed, mounted on a shag-hair steed,
Full fifteen thousand brings, both horse and foot,
Of desperate Ordovicians, whose use is
To rush half-naked on their foes, enrag'd
With a rude noise of pipes.

Your province, bounded with that boiling stream³
Where Sabrine (lovely damsel) lost her breath,
And with curl'd-pated Humber, Neptune's heir, Affords eight thousand cars, with hooks and scythes,

And fifty thousand expert men of war;
All brave Loëgrians, arm'd with pike and spear;
Each nation, being distinguish'd into troops,
With gaudy pennons flickering⁴ in the air.

¹ Shields. The author of this play appears to advantage in this and the subsequent catalogues of warriors. — Steevens.

² Broadwords.

³ The Severn.

⁴ Fluttering.

Besides these, Kent is up in arms to blunt
The edge of their first furious shock.

CAS. We'll now invite them to a martial feast,
Carving with falchions, and carousing healths
In their lives' moisture.

Enter ANDROGEUS.

Well-returned, Androgeus :

Have you obtain'd, or is your suit denied ?

AND. Our message told unto the Scots ; their king

With willing sympathy levies a band,
Ten thousand footmen, whose strange appetites Murder and then devour ; and dare gnaw and suck

Their enemies' bones. Conducted thence, we saw
The Pictish court, and friendly entertain'd,
Receive eight thousand, whose most ugly shapes,
Painted like bears and wolves, and brinded tigers,
May kill and stonify without all weapons.

More aid they promise, if more need. These forces,

Led by Cadallan, hither march with speed.

CAS. 'Tis well, our kings consent for common good.

When all are join'd, we shall o'erspread the hills,
And soldiers, thicker than the sand on shore,
Hide all the landing coasts. Ere next daybreak,
The rocks shall answer what the drum doth speak.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

HULACUS, LANTONUS, Ministers.

LAN. That ceremonious fear, which bends the heart

Of mortal creatures, and displays itself
 In outward signs of true obedience,
 As prayer, kneeling, sacrifice, and hymns,
 Requires again help from immortal deities,
 As promise, not as debt. We laud their names :
 They give us blessings, and forgive our blames.
 Thus gods and men do barter : what in piety
 Ascends, as much descends again in pity ;
 A golden chain reaching from heaven to earth.

HUL. And now's the time, good brother, of their aid,
 When danger's black face frowns upon our state.
 Away, away, ye hearts and tongues profane !
 Without devotion mysteries are vain.

[They kneel, elevate hands thrice.]

LAN. Draw near, ye heavenly powers,
 Who dwell in starry bowers ;
 And ye, who in the deep
 On mossy pillows sleep ;
 And ye who keep the centre,
 Where never light did enter ;
 And ye whose habitations
 Are still among the nations ;
 To see and hear our doings,
 Our births, our wars, our wooings :
 Behold our present grief,
 Belief doth beg relief.

Both going around say—

By the vervain and lunary,
 By fern-seed planetary,
 By the dreadful misletoe,
 Which doth on holy oak grow,
 Draw near, draw near, draw near !
 HUL. Help us, beset with danger,
 And turn away your anger ;
 Help us, begirt with trouble,
 And now your mercy double :

Help us, oppress'd with sorrow,
 And fight for us to-morrow.
 Let fire consume the foeman,
 Let air infect the Roman :
 Let seas entomb their fury,
 Let gaping earth them bury :
 Let fire, and air, and water,
 And earth, conspire their slaughter.

BOTH. By the vervain, &c.

Help us, help us, help us !

LAN. We'll praise then your great pow'r,

Each month, each day, each hour ;

And blaze in lasting story

Your honour and your glory.

High altars lost in vapour,

Young heifers free from labour,

White lambs for suck still crying,

Shall make your music dying.

The boys and girls around,

With honeysuckles crown'd ;

The bards with harp and rhyming,

Green bays their brows entwining,

Sweet tune and sweeter ditty,

Shall chant your gracious pity.

BOTH. By the vervain, &c.

We'll praise, we'll praise, we'll praise !

[The image of the moon : the shrine opens.]

HUL. Fix, holy brother, now your prayers on one,

Britain's chief patroness : with humble cry

Let us invoke the moon's bright majesty.

[They kneel.]

LAN. Thou queen of heaven, commandress of the deep,

Lady of lakes, regent of woods and deer,

A lamp dispelling irksome night, the source

Of generable moisture ; at whose feet,

With garments blue and rushy garlands dress'd,

Wait twenty thousand Naiades : thy crescent
 Brute elephants adore, and man doth feel
 Thy force run through the zodiac of his limbs.
 O thou first guide of Brutus to this isle,
 Drive back these proud usurpers from this isle.
 Whether the name of Cynthia's silver globe :
 Or chaste Diana with a gilded quiver :
 Or dread Proserpina, stern Dis his spouse :
 Or soft Lucina, call'd in childbed throes,
 Doth thee delight—rise with a glorious face,
 Green drops of Nereus trickling down thy cheeks,
 And with bright horns, united in full orb,
 Toss high the seas, with billows beat the banks,
 Conjure up Neptune and th' Æolian slaves ;
 Contract both night and winter in a storm,
 That Romans lose their way, and sooner land
 At sad Avernus, than at Albion's strand.
 So may'st thou shun the dragon's head and tail !
 So may Endymion snort on Latmian bed !
 So may the fair game fall before thy bow :
 Shed light on us, but lightning on our foe !

HUL. Methinks a gracious lustre spreads her brow,
 And with a nod she ratifies our suit.

WITHIN. Come near, and take this oracle.

LAN. Behold, an oracle flies out from her shrine ;
 Which both the king and state shall see, before
 We dare unfold it. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.

BRENNUS'S GHOST, NENNIUS in night-ropes.

BREN. Follow me.

NEN. Follow ! what means that word ? who art ? thy will ?

BREN. Follow me, Nennius.

NEN. He names me: sure, it is some friend which speaks.

I'll follow thee, though't be through Stygian lakes.

BREN. 'Tis ancient Brennus calls, whose victories
Europe and Asia felt, and still record.

Dear Nennius, now's the time to steel thy courage:

Canst thou behold thy mother captive, then

Look back upon thy ancestors, enroll'd

Among the worthies who spread wide her fame?

First let thy eyeballs pour out poison'd beams,

And kill them with disdain, who dare but lift

Their hand against her. No: no consul must Boast of her thralldom, and outbrave our walls.

I wonder that such impudent owls should gaze

Against the splendour of our Briton cliffs:

Play thou a second Brennus: let thy lance,

Like an Herculean club, two monsters tame,

Rome's avarice and pride: so come life or death,

Let honour have the incense of thy breath. [Exit.

NEN. Farewell, heroic soul; thou shalt not blush

At Nennius' deeds. The smallest drop of fame

Is cheap, if death and dangers may it buy.

Yet give thy words new vigour to my spirits,

And spur the Pegasus of my mounting thoughts.

I'll follow thee o'er piles of slaughter'd foes,

And knock at Pluto's gate. I come. Come life or death,

Honour, to thee I consecrate my breath. [Exit.

CÆSAR, CAMILLUS'S GHOST following.

CAM. Julius, stay here; thy friend Camillus speaks.

CÆS. O thou preserver of our present race!

Our city's second founder! what dire fate

Troubles thy rest, that thou shouldst trouble mine?

CAM. Only to bid thee fight.

CÆS. Thou shalt not need.

CAM. And bid thee take a full revenge on this—
This nation, which did sack and burn down Rome, Quenching the coals with blood, and kick'd our ashes,

Trampling upon the ruins of our state ;
Then led the Gauls in triumph thorough Greece,
To fix their tents beside Euxinus' gulf.

CÆS. Is this that Northern rout, the scourge of kingdoms,
Whose names, till now unknown, we judged
Gauls—

Their tongue and manners not unlike ?

CAM. Gauls were indeed the bulk ; but Brennius led

(Then brother to the British king) those armies,
Back'd with great troops of warlike islanders.

To thee belongs to render bad for ill.

O, be my spirit doubled in thy breast,
With all the courage of three Scipios,
Marius and Sylla, that this nation, fierce

In feats of war, be fore'd to bear our yoke. [Exit.]

CÆS. So may'st thou sweetly rest, as I shall strive

To trace your steps : nor let me live, if I

Thence disappointed ever seem to fly. [Exit.]

SCENE VIII.

CHORUS.

1st Song.

*Ancient bards have sung
With lips dropping honey
And a sugar'd tongue,
Of our worthy knights :*

*How Brute¹ did giants tame,
And, by Isis' current,
A second Troy did frame :
A centre of delights.*

*Locrinus² eldest son
Did drown the furious Hun,
But burnt himself with Elstred's love :
Leil,³ rex pacificus ;
Elud,⁴ judicious,
Now heavenly bodies roll above.
Wise Bladud⁵ founded hath
Both soul and body's bath,
Like Icarus he flew :
Now first Mulmutius⁶ wears
A golden crown, whose heirs
More than half the world subdue.*

2d Song.

*Thou nurse of champions, O thou spring
Whence chivalry did flow !
Thou diamond of the world's great ring,
Thy glorious virtue show :*

¹ See note to act iii., sc. 5.

² See Geoffrey of Monmouth, bk. ii.; the play of "Locrine," [probably by Charles Tylney, and falsely] attributed to Shakespeare; and Evans's "Old Ballads," vol. i.

³ See Geoffrey of Monmouth, bk. ii. c. 9.

⁴ Ibid., bk. iii. c. 19.

⁵ Ibid., bk. ii. c. 10.

⁶ Dunwallo Molmutius. See note to act iii. sc. 5.

There was an old historical play called "Mulmutius Dunwallo," which in Henslowe's MS. has the date of September 1598 affixed to it; but it must have been written much earlier, as William Rankins, the author of it, had long before repented of his "lewd life," and in 1587 published his "Mirror of Monsters," a puritanical attack on the stage and plays in general.—Collier.

*Thou many a lord hast bred,
 In catalogue of fame read ;
 And still we have
 As captives brave,
 As ever Britons led.
 Then dub a dub, dub.
 The armies join, tantara.*

*Cassibelane with armour gay
 And strongly couched lance,
 His courser white turn'd into bay,
 On carcases shall prance.
 What a crimson stream the blade
 Of Nennius' sword hath made !
 Black Allia's day
 And Cannæ's fray
 Have for a third long stay'd.
 Then dub a dub, dub.
 The armies join, tantara.*

ACT III., SCENE I.

Noise of ships landing, and the battle within.

CÆSAR, VOLUSENUS, LABERIUS, ATRIUS. Ensign, drums, flags.

CÆS. Our landing cost us dearly, many lives
 Between the ships and shore being sacrific'd :
 Our men, with heavy armour clogg'd, and ignorant
 Of all the flats and shallows, were compell'd
 To wade and fight, like Tritons, half above,
 Half under water. Now we surer tread,
 Though much diminish'd by so many lost.
 Come on, come on. [They march and go out.]

CASSIBELANUS, CRIDOUS, BRITAEI, GUERTHED,
the four Kings of Kent, NENNIUS, ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS, EULINUS, HIRILDAS, BELINUS, ROLLANO. Ensigns, drum. A march.

CAS. So, let them land. No matter which they choose,

Fishes or crows, to be executors.

They'll find the land as dangerous as the sea.

The nature of our soil won't bear a Roman,

As Irish earth doth poison poisonous beasts.¹

On then! charge close, before they gather head.

NEN. Brother, advance. On this side I'll lead
 up

The new-come succours of the Scots and Picts.

[They march and go out.]

CÆSAR, &c.

CÆS. What, still fresh supplies come thronging from their dens!

The nest of hornets is awake. I think

Here's nature's shop: here men are made, not born;

Nor stay nine tedious months, but in a trice

Sprout up like mushrooms at war's thunderclap.

We must make out a way. [Exeunt.]

ROLLANO, armed cap-a-pie.

ROL. Since I must fight, I am prepar'd to fight!
 And much inflam'd with noise of trump and drum:

Methinks I am turn'd lion, and durst meet

Ten Cæsars. Where are all these covetous rogues,

¹ [An allusion to a belief which is mentioned in many of our early plays. See Dyce's Middleton, iv. 495.]

Who spoil the rich for gain, and kill the poor
For glory? bloodsuckers and public robbers.

[LABERIUS enters, ROLLANO retires, afraid;
but being gone out, goes forward.

ROL. Nay, stay, and brag Rollano did thee kill:
Stay, let me flesh my sword, and wear thy spoils.

[LABERIUS re-enters with an ensign.

LAB. Come, will ye forsake your ensign, and fall off?

I call to witness all the gods, I here Perform my duty. Thou canst not escape.

[ROLLANO would fly, fights, falls as wounded.
Now die, or yield thyself!

ROL. I yield, I yield! O, save my life, I yield!
I am no Briton, but by chance come hither.
I'll never more lift weapon in their quarrel.

LAB. How may I trust your faith?

ROL. Command me anything.

LAB. Lay down your neck. [Treads on it.
Give up your sword. [Beats him with it.
Base coward, live: such foes will ne'er do hurt.

[Exit.

Enter EULINUS, ANDROGEUS, BELINUS, with bloody swords.

EUL. Rollano! what, at stand? pursue the chase.

ROL. I made their strongest captain fly: this hand,

This martial hand, I say, did make him fly.

EUL. Some silly scout!

ROL. He was a match for Cyclops; at each step

The ground dane'd, and his nostrils blew the dust:

Arm'd as the god of battle pictur'd is.

EUL. What were his looks?

ROL. His brows were like a stormy winter night,

When Juno scolding and Mars malcontent
Disturb the air. At each look lightning flies ;
Jove 'gainst the giants needed but his eyes.

EUL. How eloquent is fear !

ROL. So came he stalking with a beam-like spear :

I gave the onset, then receiv'd his charge,
And next blow cleft his morion : ¹ so he flies.

EUL. O, bravely done ! here comes a straggling soldier.

Enter LABERIUS.

ROL. 'Tis he, 'tis he. I care not for vain glory ;
It's sweeter live, than dead to be a story.

[Runs away.]

EUL. O valiant coward, stay ! There's not a spark

Of Briton spirit doth enlive thy corpse. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

NENNIUS pursuing.

NEN. Fight, Britons, fight ! The day is ours.
I'm cloy'd

And glutted e'en with slaughter. There some fly,
And flying die, and dying mangled lie.

I twice broke through the ranks, yet cannot find
That vent'rous captain Cæsar, on whose breast
I long to try my blade, and prick that bladder
Puff'd with ambition and victorious fight.

CÆSAR enters.

CÆS. We may confess they come of Trojan kind :
An hundred valiant Hectors here we find.

¹ Helmet.

NEN. Fairly encounter'd : let our blades discuss
 Who hath the justest cause ; and on this combat
 May Victory her equal balance hang.

CÆS. Thou seem'st a worthy prince, and Cæsar's match.

[They fight, wounds NENNIUS in the head, who staggers ; fights, and recovers CÆSAR'S sword fallen, and puts him to flight.

NEN. Stay, stay ! Thou art at home : here's Campus Martius.

The Britons, sought for, see thy frightened back :
 Return, and take possession of our isle,
 And by thy death be styl'd Britannicus.
 Leave not thy blade unsheath'd : a tyrant's heart
 To his own sword a scabbard should impart.
 Ye senators and gaily-gown'd Quirites,
 Open the Capitol's ivory gates, and lead
 Fat bulls with garlands green and gilded horns :
 Let supplications last for twice ten days :
 Cæsar returns a victor !
 Prepare the laureate coach and snow-white steeds,
 Embroider'd canopy and scarlet gowns :
 Let altars smoke, and tholes expect our spoils,¹ Cæsar returns in triumph ! Basely flies,
 And leaves his conquest in weak infancy.
 For had he won this coast, yet many blows Must pass, ere he could pass the Thames ; and
 then,
 Ere he touch Humber, many nations must
 Be tam'd ; and then, before he Tweed can drink,
 And climb the craggy rocks of Caledon,
 A life is spent—yea, many thousand lives.
 O, my wound rages, and tormented brain

¹ i.e., The roofs of the temples.

"De tholis pendent laqueata circum Arma."

Doth labour of a fury, not a Pallas.¹
 This blade was steep'd in poison : O, I'm poison'd !
 Well didst thou fly, or I had made thee taste
 Thine own provision. Now my wrath and pain
 With double force shall flow in purple streams.
 The three infernal ladies with wire whips
 And speckled snakes shall lackey close my steps,
 While that I offer hecatombs of men.
 The Latian shepherd's brood² shall ban those stars,
 Whose glimmering sparks led their audacious pines
 To lie so far from home in foreign soil.
 When cedars fall, whole woods are crush'd ; nor die
 Can Nennius private without company.

Enter LABERIUS.

Thou runn'st upon thy death.

LAB. A Roman never daunted was with looks,
 Else had not Samartane and Lybian bugbears
 Been captive led in chains.

NEN. But our looks kill. [Fight. LABERIUS falls.
 Die, slave, by Cæsar's sword ! Thou art his friend :
 Die as the ransom of his greater ghost ;
 And learn, as well as I, how venom smarts.
 Be thou my post to the Tartarian prince,
 And tell him Nennius comes : but first I'll send
 More of you headlong home, a nearer way
 Than by the cloudy Alps. [Exit. A retreat sound.]

¹ Pallas being feigned by the poets to have been bred in Jupiter's brain.

² i.e., The Romans, who owed their founders, Romulus and Remus, to the care of Faustulus, who was shepherd to the tyrant Amulius.—Steevens.

SCENE III.

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS, LANTONUS.

CAS. Now hot alarms die in fainter notes :
 Tempestuous night is gone : victorious joy—
 As when pale Eos¹ cleaves the eastern fogs,
 And, blushing more and more, opens half her eye,
 With holy water sprinkling all the meads,
 Whose clear reflex serves as her morning glass—
 Doth paint with gaudy plumes the chequer'd sky.
 The only name of victory sounds sweeter
 Than all mellifluous rhetoric.

LAT. Thanks to Andates,² whose power kingdoms feel—

Andates, greatest goddess : in whose train
 Fear, red-fac'd anger, and confusion's wheel,
 Murder and desolation run before :
 But joyful shouts, mirth, olive-budding peace,
 And laurel-crowned triumph at her back
 Do pace with stately steps. Thy temple is
 The earth, where furious monarchs play the priests :
 Armies of men imbrue thy altar-stones.
 Thanks also to the trident-shaker's mace,³
 Drawn by two rampant sea-horses, at whose beck
 The waters wrinkled frown or smoothly smile.
 But thou, heav'n's diamond, fair Phœbus' sister,
 Nor Delian dames nor the Ephesian towers Shall blazon more thy praise. Thy influence
 strong

¹ The goddess of the morning.—Steevens.

² The goddess of revenge. Baxter, in his "Glossary," says she is corruptly so called, and that her true name should be Andrasta.

³ A mace [here seems to mean a sceptre, but properly stands for a club.]

Struck up the sandy ooze, that madding waves
 Batter'd their ships, and dash'd their bended sails,
 And with a tempest turn'd them round in scorn.

CAS. But where's the answer which her idol gave ?

Can you expound the sense ?

LAN. Dread sovereign, thus runs the oracle—

*Loud doth the king of beasts roar,
 High doth the queen of birds soar :
 But her wings clipp'd soon grow out ;
 Both repent they are so stout.
 Till C. 'gainst C. strike a round,
 In a perfect circle bound.*

The meaning, wrapp'd up in cross doubtful terms,
 Lies yet thus open. That disastrous fate
 Must be the prologue to a joyful close.

The rest we'll search out, if our skill don't fail.

BEL. Renown'd Cassibelane, might my counsel speak ?

CAS. I know thy loyal heart and prudent head,
 Upon whose hairs Time's child, Experience, hangs
 A milk-white badge of wisdom ; and canst wield
 Thy tongue in senate and thy hands in field.
 Speak free, Belinus.

BEL. We forfeit fame and smother victory
 By idle lingering : the foe discomfited
 Must needs be much amaz'd ; his ships dismem-ber'd,

Do piecemeal float upon the waves : the horse,
 Whose succour he expects, are beaten back
 By friendly winds : his camp contracted is :
 A tithe of soldiers left, the rest all slain :
 His chief munition spent or lost : provision
 (An army's soul) but what we give, he wants.
 What then shall hinder to destroy their name ?
 So none again shall venture : but our isle,

Rounded with Nereus' girdle, may enjoy
Eternal peace.

CÆS. I like thy warning ; with united stroke
Of all our nations we'll his camp beleaguer,
Devouring ships and men. But one mischance,
My brother's wound (his mortal wound, I fear)
'Turns all to wormwood. Why were ye dumb, ye idols ?

No sainted statue did foretell this grief.
Come, let's go visit him. You may, lord general,
Set Comius free ; we love not to insult,
But render good for ill. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

CÆSAR, VOLUSENUS, &c.

CÆS. Heaven, sea and wind, and all the elements,
Conspire to work us harm. Our ships, in Gaul Windbound, at length put forth and come in view,
Are toss'd and torn ; our navy on the shore
With civil discord break each other's planks.
The airy rulers are displeas'd ; all day
Noises and nimble flashes, mix'd with rain,
Amaze our soldiers.
To make grief full, my daughter's death I hear.
When, powerful fortune, will thy anger cease ?
Never till now did Cæsar fortune fear.
Mount Palatine, thou throne of Jove, and ye,
Whose lesser turrets pinnacle Rome's head,
Are all your deities fled ? or was I bold
To outgo nature, and our empire stretch
Beyond her limits ? Pardon, then, my fault.
Or do we basely faint ? Or is our might Answer'd with like, since Troy 'gainst Troy doth fight ?

Nor can I write now, *I came over, and
I overcame*: such foes deny such haste.

VOL. The islanders consult, and (sure) intend
Some sudden stratagem. And now the scales
Poise equal day and night, when rougher seas
And stormy Pleiads may our passage stop.

CÆS. Then, sirs, to ship! Compell'd, I leave this land,
But to return, if gods do not withstand. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS, LANTONUS. NENNIUS in a chair.

NEN. We won the day, and all our foes are fled?

BEL. Yes, noble Nennius, scatter'd on the shore,
Thick lay the Latins, and the glutted stream Spews up her dead, whom death hath taught to swim,

Though ignorant alive: their flowing blood
Made a new red sea. But those few we lost,
Sweetly repos'd upon their mother's breast,
And, wounded all before, kept in their face
A warlike frown.

NEN. Where is false Cæsar's sword, call'd *Crocea
Mors*,¹
Which never hurt but kill'd? Let it be plac'd Within my tomb.

BEL. Here is the fatal blade.

¹ Geoffrey of Monmouth says, "His (Nennius's) funeral exequies were performed with regal pomp, and Cæsar's sword put into the tomb with him, which he kept possession of when struck into his shield in the combat. The name of the sword was Crocea Mors, Yellow Death, as being mortal to everybody that was wounded with it."—Bk. iv. c. 4, Thompson's translation, 1718, p. 102.

NEN. Death like a Parthian flies, and flying kills ;
 In midst of conquest came my deadly wound.
 Accursed weapon—more accursed man
 Who, serpent-like, in poison bathes his sting !
 Tiber doth breed as venomous beasts as Nile.
 We scorn such cruel craft. But death draws near,
 A giddy horror seizeth on my brain.
 Dear brother, and thou holy priest of heaven,
 Witness my words ; I leave my country free,
 And die a victor. Thus with lighter wing
 My purified soul mounts to her first best cause.
 I long even to behold those glorious cloisters,
 Where Brütus,¹ great Dunwallo,² and his sons,
 Thrice-noble spirits, walk.
 Thou mighty engineer of this wondrous globe,
 Protect this isle, confound all foreign plots :
 Grant Thames and Tiber never join their channels ;
 But may a natural hate, deriv'd from us,
 Live still in our long-trailed progeny—
 My eyes do swim in death—
 Before this land shall wear the Roman yoke,
 Let first the adamantine axle crack,
 Which binds the ball terrestrial to her poles,
 And dash the empty air ! let planets drop
 Their scalding jelly, and, all flame being spent,
 Entomb the world in everlasting smoke !³

¹ By Geoffrey of Monmouth said to be the great grandson of Æneas. After being banished from Italy, on account of accidentally killing his father, he arrived at Britain, to which he gave his own name. He built Trinorantum, or London, and dying, left the government of the nation to his sons.

² Dunwallo Molmutius, son of Cloton, King of Cornwall. After a reign of 40 years he died, and was buried at Trinovantium, near the Temple of Concord.—“Geoffrey of Monmouth,” bk. ii. c. 17. [Compare p. 484.]

³ So in “King Henry IV., Part. II.”—

“And darkness be the burier of the dead.”

Come faster, Death : I can behold thy grim
 . And ugly jaws with quiet mind. Now, now
 I hear sweet music ; and my spirit flies. [He dies.

CAS. His breath is gone, who was his country's prop
 And my right hand. Now only doth he crave
 To see him laid with honour in the grave. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

EULINUS, HIRILDAS.

EUL. A mind content, O, 'tis a mind of pearl :
 A mint of golden thoughts, a heaven on earth !
 When eager longers meet full-butt their scope,
 And hopes are actuated beyond hope.
 So Jason joy'd, the golden fleece obtain'd ;
 So Hercules joy'd, the golden fruit being gain'd ;
 So Venus joy'd the golden ball to hold ;
 So Midas joy'd when he turn'd all to gold.
 So, and much more, rejoic'd the Phrygian swain,
 When he convey'd the fairest (except mine),
 Which air did ever kiss. His brazen keel,
 Proud of her burden, slic'd the capering brine :
 The Tritons blew their horns, and sea-gods dance.
 Before, behind, about his ship they prance :
 The mermaids skip on high, but to compare
 Their dangling tresses with her silken hair—
 These were but shadows of my bliss. A robe
 Of pure beatitude wraps me round about,
 Without a speck or blemish : nor can invention
 Wish more unto me than I have—Landora.
 I'm rich, free, learned, honour'd—all in this.
 Who dares conceive against the female sex
 But one base thought? Lo, here I stand their champion,
 And will maintain he is a beast, a devil,

Begot between a bitch-wolf and an incubus.
 Women, all-good, all-perfect and all-gracious,
 Men-making creatures, angels clad in flesh ;
 Let me adore your name !

HIR. And let me speak.

Why, Landora loves not you, but me in you.

EUL. But I in you enjoy Landora's love,

HIR. But she enjoys not your love, 'cause unknown.

EUL. No matter, I in you or you in me,
 So that I still possess my dearest dear.
 A paltry fancy last night in her bed
 Turmoil'd my thoughts, which since I shap'd in rhymes.

Thus.

HIR. Prythee let's hear : I know thou art turn'd poet.

The Dream.

Night having drawn the curtain, down I lie
 By one—for worse Saturnius left the sky.
 Slumb'ring at last, for love can hardly sleep,
 Straightways I dream'd, for love doth revels keep,
 A damsel fair, and fashion'd for delight
 (Our day-born objects do return at night),
 With flow'ry chaplet and red velvet gown,
 Which from her breast was fasten'd along down
 With rich enamell'd locks, all which one key,
 Whose bright gold 'bout her silver neck did play,
 Could open and divorce. A veil most fair
 (Such whiteness only Paphian doves do wear)
 With false light did her beauteous front improve ;
 From this arch Cupid shot his darts of love.
 With gentle strain she took me by the hand
 (Touches in love do more than tongues command),
 Then leads me with an amorous smile along :
 He's easily led whom beauty draws, more strong
 Than cable ropes. An altar we descriy,

Where incense-frank¹ and amber fumes did fly
 In little rolling curls : a reverend priest,
 With snowy beard waving upon his breast,
 There kneeling did his eyes in sorrow steep.
 Whose passionate cry made me, though ignorant, weep.

Phlegon's² hot breath no sooner licks up dew
 Than joy had dried those tears ; for, lo, I view
 A circular room, all built with marble clear,
 The title, nature's storehouse. Most strange here
 It seem'd : I know not how we came nor whence,
 Nor any passage saw to get from thence.
 But O, the rich delight and glorious fire
 Which dazzled me ! no heart can more desire.
 Here first my guide op'd her spice-breathing door :
 Ask what thou wilt, this is the ark of store :
 No vows are here repuls'd, she said. But I,
 Surpris'd with extreme joy and ecstasy,
 By chance a scorpion's tail behind her spied :
 Pity such beauty such a monster hide !
 Trembling, yet silent, doubtful what to crave ;
 Lo ! with a stink and fearful screech this brave
 And glorious dame doth vanish, and a dart,
 Which still I quake at, struck me to the heart.
 But waking I reviv'd, and found in bed
 Such sovereign balm would cure old Peleus dead.³

Hir. Ha, ha ! your tedious dream hath made me drowsy.

But hark, we must attend the funeral pomp.

¹ Frankincense.—Steevens.

² One of the horses of the Sun.—Steevens.

³ Perhaps Pylius, i.e., Nestor—

“ Illius ad tactum Pylius juvenescere possit.”

—Steevens.

SCENE VII.

*The funeral passes over the stage. NENNIUS'S scutcheon, armour, CÆSAR'S sword borne.
Torches, mourners.*

CAS. Set down that heavy load with heavier hearts.

Could virtuous valour, honourable thoughts,
A noble scorn of fortune, pride and death,
Myriads of vows and prayers sent to heaven ;
Could country's love or Britain's genius save
A mortal man from sleeping in his grave,
Then hadst thou liv'd, great Nennius, and outliv'd

The smooth-tongu'd Greek. But we may more
envy,

And less bewail thy loss, since thou didst fall
On honour's lofty field-bed, on which stage
Never did worthy act a statelier part.
Nor durst pale death approach with cypress sad,
Till flourishing bays thy conquering temples clad.

A Funeral Elegy sung to the Harp.

*Turnus may conceal his name,
Nennius had Æneas' fame.
Hannibal let Afric smother,
Nennius was great Scipio's brother.
Greece, forbear Achilles' story,
Nennius had brave Hector's glory.
Thrush and nightingale, be dumb :
Sorrowful songs besit a tomb.
Turn, ye marble stones, to water :
Isis' nymphs forswear all laughter :
Sigh and sob upon your bed,
Beli's noble son is dead.*

A banquet served over the stage. ROLLANO, with a leg of a capon and a tankard of wine.

ROL. I like such slaughtering well of birds and beasts,
Which wear no swords, nor shake a fatal pike,
When hogsheads bleed, and oxen mangled lie.
O, what a world of victuals is prepar'd
For sacrifice and feasting! Forty thousand Fat bullocks! then the parks and forests send Full thirty thousand wild beasts, arm'd with horns
And dangerous teeth: the main battalion
Consists of sheep, an hundred thousand fat:
The wings are both supplied with birds and fowls
Sans number: and some fish for succours serve—
A goodly army. Troynovant doth smoke,
And smells all like a kitchen. The king, princes,
And nobles of the land a triumph hold.
Music and songs, good cheer and wine; and wine
And songs, and music and good cheer. Hei, brave!
No more shall barley-broth pollute my throat,
But nectar—nectar of the grape's sweet blood.
Come, heavenly potion—wine, whose gentle warmth
Softens the brain, unlocks the silent tongue;
Wit's midwife, and our spirit's vestal priest,
Keeping alive the natural heat. A health,
A health (to make short work) to all the world!
So will it (sure) go round. [Steals behind.

The triumphs. CASSIBELANUS: four Kings of Kent: three Kings, CRIDOUS, BRITAEI, GUERTHED; ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS, HIRILDAS, EULINUS, BELINUS, take places.

CAS. Sorrow must doff her sable weeds, and joy
Furbish the Court with fresh and verdant colours;
Else should we seem ungrateful to the gods.

Triumphs must thrust out obsequies ; and tilt
 With tourney, and our ancient sport call'd Troy,
 Such as Iulus 'bout his grandsire's tomb
 Did represent ; and at each temple's porch,
 Games, songs, and holy murdering of beasts.
 [They sit down.]

A dancing masque of six enters, then the epinicion¹, sung by two bards.

*The Roman eagle, threatening woe,
 The sea did shadow with her wing ;
 But our goose-quills did prick her so
 That from the clouds they down her bring.*

BOTH. *Sing then, ye hills and dales so-so clear,
 That Iö Pæan all may hear.*

*They may us call isles fortunate ;
 They sought for life here, not for fame.
 All yield to them, they to our state :
 The world knows but our double name.*

BOTH. *Sing then, ye streams and woods so-so clear,
 That Iö Pæan all may hear.*

ANDROGEUS and TENANTIUS play at foils, then HIRILDAS and EULINUS play.

EUL. 'Twas foully play'd.

HIR. You lie, 'twas fairly hit.

EUL. I'll giye a quittance.

HIR. Do your worst, vain braggart.

[They take swords, fight, HIRILDAS slain.]

O, I'm slain.

CAS. Hold, hold ! my nephew's slain before my face.

Life shall be paid with life.

¹ The song of triumph.

AND. He shall not die.

CAS. Shall not ? your king and uncle says he shall.

EUL. No kingly menace or censorious frown
Do I regard. Tanti¹ for all your power !
But the compunction of my guilt doth send
A shudd'ring chilness through my veins inflam'd.
Why do ye stare, ye grisly powers of night ?
There, there his soul goes : I must follow him.

[Offers to kill himself : is hindered.]

AND. He was provok'd, and did it in defence :
And, being my kinsman, shall be judg'd by laws
Of Troynovant : such custom claims our court.

CAS. No custom shall bar justice. I command
That he appear before us.

AND. Trials are vain when passion sits as judge.

CAS. I'll soon rebate this insolent disdain.

[Exeunt ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS, and EULINUS.
Let not this dismal chance deface our joy,
Most royal friends.]

CRI. War being silenced, and envy's rage
In hell fast fetter'd, sound we now retreat,
That soldiers may regret their household gods ;
Their children cling about their armed thighs.

BRI. And place their trophies 'bout their smoky halls ;
There hang a gauntlet bright, here a stabb'd
buckler,
Pile up long pikes,² and in that corner plant

¹ This expression of contempt I have seen in other ancient writers. It is used in the first scene of Marlowe's "Edward II."—

"As for the multitude, they are but sparks
Rak'd up in embers of their poverty ;
Tanti ; I'll fan first on the wind," &c.

There is, perhaps, some omission after it, as the line is imperfect, which might explain the meaning of the exclamation.—Collier.

² [Old copy, piles.]

A weighty sword, brandish'd by some centurion :
 Not he, who ne'er on snaky perils trod,
 But happy he, who hath them stoutly pass'd :
 For danger's sauce gives joy a better taste.

GUER. Great monarch, if thy summons call us back,

We tender here our service, men and arms,
 As duty bids and binds.

CAS. Should he return, our province dares him front.

So a most kind adieu unto all three.

[Exeunt CRIDOUS, BRITAEI, and GUERTHED.
 Cingetorix, Carvilius, Taximagulus, Segonax,
 I know your faithful love : Kent's fourfold head
 Will check rash rebels, and as firmly stand
 As hearty oaks, who bear off Æolus' blows,
 And with a whistle but deride his force.

[Exeunt four Kings of Kent.

Burst, gall, and dye my actions in flame-colour !
 I saw Hirildas fall, and breathe his soul
 Even in my face ; as though hell watch'd a time
 To crush our pomp and glory into sighs.
 The conduits of his vital spring being ripp'd,
 Spurtl'd my robes, soliciting revenge. Belinus,
 Attach the murderer, and if abettors
 Deny obedience, then with sword and fire
 Waste their dominions. For a traitor's sake, Whole towns shall tremble, and the ground shall quake. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.

ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS, MANDUBRATIUS.

AND. Shall justice and just Libra ne'er forsake
 Th' embroider'd belt ? no sign of them on earth ?
 Are gods dim-sighted grown, or do they sleep

The morning, and carouse the afternoon,
That mortal motions tumble thus by chance ?
Cleave, thou blue marble ceiling, that heaven's king
With clearer aim may strike a tyrant's crown,
Nor spend his brimstone bullets 'gainst some hill
Or innocent pine.

MAN. Your injuries run low ; mine break all bounds.

My father butcher'd at his lawless will :
I banish'd from my lands, depos'd from rule,
Owing my life to night and flight.

TEN. I do confess, you may complain aloud,
And tear the element with a dolorous note :
Call down Astræa from her crystal chair,
Or call up Nemesis from the direful deep,
To expiate your wrongs.
Else would the manes of your father slain
In a white sheet come sliding to your bed,
And be reveng'd on you. He gave you life ;
How can you better spend it, than to wreak
His death and slaughter ? but our case and cause,
Brother, is not the same. Eulinus slew
His innocent friend, and we defend the fact,
With hostile noise drowning law's reverend voice ;
But murder outcries both. Give me then leave
To be a neutral : my young years, unfit
For any desperate course, can but complain,
The king our uncle doth not use us well. [Exit.]

AND. Usurpers use this method still : at first
He as protector slyly got the stern,
During our nonage : then the commons' voice,
Bought with a fawning brow and popular grace,
Confirms his regiment ;¹ we appointed sharers,

¹ i.e., His government, authority. Hitherto it was mis-printed—

"Bought with a frowning brow and popular grace."

The right reading is restored from the quarto.—Collier.

With empty titles to beguile our thoughts,
Like puppet-lords dress'd up with crown and scarf,
Glad that we live and hunt, and reign o'er brutes—

Our uncle is the king who,¹ when he saw
His throne establish'd and his foes repuls'd,
Grown big with prosperous fortune, proudly spurns
All fear of God or man.

MAN. His anger, nurs'd by jealousies, must feed
On princes' flesh, who lose both state and life,
If they but look awry. A tyrant's growth,
Rear'd up by ruins, thence may learn his fall :
For whom all fear, he justly feareth all.

AND. In antiphons² thus tune we female plaints ;
But plots and force beseem us. Thus great Cæsar Shall pull him down below us. Thou, Mandu-brace,
Sure pledges take of our revolt, and quickly
Implore his aid, blow up his drooping fire
With hopeful terms. But let him stronger come.

MAN. I fly unseen, as charmers³ in a mist.
Grateful revenge, whose sharp-sweet relish fats
My apprehensive soul!⁴ though all were pared off
Which doth accrue from fortune, and a man left

¹ [Old copy, King. So when.]

² Alternate singing.—Stevens.

³ Charmers are enchanters or magicians. So in "Othello," act iii. sc. 4—

"That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give ;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people."

And again in "The Two Noble Kinsmen," act v. sc. 4—

"Oh, you heavenly charmers,
What things you make of us !"

⁴ i.e., Perceptive, feeling. Falstaff observes that sack makes the mind apprehensive, quick, &c.

As barely poor as nature thrust him out ;
 Nay worse—though spirits boil : rage, anger, care,
 And grief, like wild-horse, tear the affrighted
 mind ;
 Though wrongs excoriate the heart ; yet all is sweeten'd
 If vengeance have her course. I reckon¹ not how ;
 Let commonwealth expire, and owls proclaim
 Sad desolation in our halls ; let heaps
 Of dust and rubbish epitaph our towns ;
 Let fire and water fight, who first shall spoil
 This universal frame. From north or south,
 Revenge, th' art welcome ! No sin worse than pity ;
 A tyrant's only physic is phlebotomy. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX. Chorus.1st Song.

Rejoice, O Britain !	O that sweet Plenides,
Britain, O, rejoice !	Eloquent Orone,
The stormy cloud pass'd	Were now to chant our
o'er,	victories
And only made a noise.	With a melodious tone :
A clattering sound was	And rousing echo from the
heard,	dales,
And still we felt no	With harmony to sound :
round :
Rejoice, rejoice,	Rejoice, rejoice,
Thou happy Britons'	Thou happy Britons'
ground.	ground.

¹ I reckon not how is the true reading : Mr Reed allowed it to stand according to the error of the old copy, I wreak not how ; but to reck and to wreak are words of a totally different signification. To reck means to care for, while to wreak means to revenge.

May squeak, it thunders, and dive into burrows.
 Let the four winds with dreadful clamours sing
 Thy anger through th' affrighted world.
 What Lemnian chain shackles our mounting eagle?
 The moon's round concave is too strait a cage
 For her advanced pinions.

Enter MANDUBRATIUS,¹ wounded and bloody, with ANDROGEUS'S young son.

MAN. If pity can have room in angry breast,
 Favour a Briton prince, his father slain,
 His regiment bereft, his dearest blood
 Drawn by the sword of false Cassibelane.
 Having got crown, he then struck at my head ;
 Nor can I safely suck my native air.
 His coz Androgeus also and whole regions
 In open war withstand his violence,
 Lo, Albion's aged arms spread wide t'enchain
 Thee, as her patron, in a true-love knot.
 Wherefore, dread Cæsar, let thy mercy strike
 Revengeful fires, and be justly styled, [Kneels.
 Tamer of tyrants. Then fame blows aloud,
 When valour helps the weak, pulls down the proud.

CÆS. Arise, unhappy prince, our deeds shall show

We grant thy suit. Fortune repents at last ;

[To VOLUSENUS.

The moon is chang'd, the globe doth to us turn
 Her shining cheek, and woos us with a smile.

¹ Mandubratius, Mr Camden observes, is by Eutropius, Bede, and the more modern writers called Androgeus, which in the British language signifies vir malus, a bad man; a name of infamy fixed on him for having been the first who betrayed his country. — Camden's "Britannia," ii. 327, edit. 1772; Baxter's "Glossary" in voce.

But what firm signs of faith, what faithful aid,
What furtherance, can you give at our arrival ?

MAN. See here Androgeus' heir, whose tender age

His father ventures, and makes bold with nature
To pledge his darling. He and thirty more
Of noble lineage shall assure our faith ;
Besides I pawn my life.

CÆS. Enough. I'll once more cross the seas :
For your good more than mine ; that happier sky
May bless your towns with peace, your fields with plenty ;

Perpetual spring, in gay perfum'd attire,
Surname your isle the garden of the west.

MAN. Thanks, gracious Cæsar, for this kind acceptance,

My knee doth kiss the ground, my lip your knee.
Pardon, ye gods, if any haunt our land,
Ye nymphs and lares, fawns and sylvans wild,
That thus I bring a stranger on our coasts,
Whose foreign shape and language may affright
Our lazy clowns, and on my country's back
Once tread victorious steps. Be pleas'd to view Wrongs now redress'd, neglected first by you.

CÆS. Now, Volusene,

Our glorious state, like the noon-pointed sun,
When he bestrides the lion's flaming fleece,
Doth north-west roll his burning brand, whose fire
The ocean's blue lake cannot stop, but flies
With brighter blaze to thaw the frozen isles.
But how proceeds our preparation ?

VOL. Many strong ships are built, five legions
arm'd

Ready to launch.

CÆS. Blow gently, Africus :

Play on our poops. When Hyperion's son
Shall couch in west his foam-bedappl'd jades,
We'll rise to run our course.

SCENE II.

EUL. Though Orpheus' harp, Arion's lute, the chimes

Whose silver sound did Theban towers raise :
Though sweet Urania with her ten-string'd lyre,
Unto whose stroke the daily-rolling spheres Dance their just measures, should with tune and tone

Tickle my air-bred ear ; yet can their notes
Those fabulous stones more enter, than my soul.
Lead, poppy, slumber, stupefy my heart ;
But Bedlam grief acts gambols in my brain.
The Centaur's wheel, Prometheus' hawk, the vulture
Of Tityus, Sisyphus' never-mossy stone,
The tale of Danaids' tub and Tantalus' gaping,
Are but flea-bitings to my smart. I've slain
A kinsman—more, a friend I dearly lov'd :
Nay more, no cause provoking, but in rash
And hellish cholera.

I thought my love had cannon-proof been 'gainst
A world of injuries ; when see, all is split
By a small wind. Cursed be thou, my sword,
The instrument of fury ! cursed hand,
Which mad'st the thrust ! but most accursed part,
Whose ruddy flesh triangular boil'd in flame,
Like an Ætnean or Vesuvian salamander !
That breast I so could hug, that faithful breast,
That snowy white, I with dark sanguine stain'd ;
And from the wound's red lips his panting heart
Did seem to say, Is this a friendly deed ?
O no, Hirildas : bears can harmless play,
Lions can dally, and sheathe up their claws ;
I only, worst of brutes, kill friends in jest.
Why does Androgeus, kindly-cruel, keep Me from their sentence ? say, law bids me die ;
If law should not, I'll make that law myself.

CAS. Wonder ! what can their arsenals spawn so fast ?

Last year his barks and galleys were debosh'd ;¹
This spring they sprout again : belike their navy,
Like the Lernæan adder, faster grows
The more 'tis prun'd. They come their last. Lord deputy,

Lead on the present troops, and levy new.
'Twere best, I think, to let him land, lest view
Of his huge navy should our commons fright.
Retire ourselves to some place of advantage,
Entice him from his ships ; so cut the veins
Which nourish both : enclos'd he cannot 'scape.

BEL. I rather judge, we should oppose his footing,

Using the benefit of our natural mound.

CAS. Uncertain 'tis where—when, he makes inroad :

To furnish all, unlikely : to neglect
Any were dangerous as Pelides' heel,
Our shores are large and level : then t' attend
His time and leisure would exhaust the state—
Weary our soldiers.

BEL. All places may be strengthen'd more or less,
As by last year discretion now may guess.
The cliffs themselves are bulwarks strong : the shelves

And flats refuse great ships : the coast so open,
That every stormy blast may rend their cables,
Put them from anchor ; suffering double war :
Their men pitch'd battle, and ships naval fight.
For charges 'tis no season to dispute :
Spend something or lose all. Shall he maintain
A fleet t' enthral us, we detract small costs.
When freedom, life and kingdom lie at stake ?

¹ i.e., Spoiled, rendered unserviceable. See Cotgrave in rocc Desbaucher.—Steevens.

CAS. But the assailants are the flower of Italy,
 Back'd with four hundred Gallic horse, all tried
 And gallant troops, join'd in one martial body,
 To give a fuller stroke ; when we defendants,
 Scatter'd along, can weak resistance make ;
 Plainness of ground affording us no shelter.

BEL. For what serve sarts and engines, mounds and trenches,

But to correct the nature of a plain ?
 A few on firm land may keep out a million
 Weaken'd by sea, false footing, billows' rage,
 And pond'rous arms ; when as, receiv'd within,
 He prospers by our spoil : we feed a viper,
 And malcontents and rebels have a refuge.
 Nor were it safe to venture all at once ;
 When one fought field being lost, swift ruin runs,
 And rushing throws down all.

CAS. We know our strength and his ; we'll fight in field

Some dozen miles from sea. An open theatre
 Gives lustre to our prowess : to keep him out
 Supposes fear, not manhood. No, let him march,
 Till he rouse Death, and stride his future grave.

BEL. Your will commands, and mine obeys.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

CÆSAR, dc. Ensign, drum, trumpet, flag, Soldiers,
Shipmen. The noise of landing.

CÆS. The coast is clear ; our honour is the goal.
 In vain doth Tagus' yellow sand obey,
 Rhine's horned front and nimble Tigris running
 For wager with the wind, which skims his top ;
 In vain from Ganges to Hesperian Gades,

The bounds mark'd out by Jove's two base-born sons¹

Our echo'd name doth sound, if we recoil
From hence again not victors.

Ye pilots old, who were begot mermaids,
Whose element is their sea, bred and brought up
In cradles rock'd with storms and wooden walls.

Fear not to grapple with the seas. Fear not
Their bulks, brave veterans ; that extended mass
Is not of iron, but can bleed and die :

They were not dipp'd in Styx, nor are they giants
Or wild poetic Centaurs we assail.

Let then this voyage quit out credit lost,
And let rage lash on courage. Here's the game ;
Life may be lost, but (sure) we'll hold fast fame !

[They march about and go out. The whole battle within.

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS, &c., Soldiers.

CAS. Our first attempt doth prosper : they retiring

Send to the bosom of their fir-tree vaults,
And under hatches hide themselves from death.
The Cornish band made havoc of their ranks.
Like Scythian wolves 'midst of a bleating fold :
The jingling lances, rattling chariot-wheels,
Madd'd their horse. The bowmen merrily shot.

BEL. Yet would our tributary kings had suc-cour'd !

We are decay'd, they much in number grown,
And surely will make head again.

CAS. Fear not ; thou know'st I can even with a whistle

Hide Kent with glitt'ring arms. More flaming sparkles

¹ Hercules and Alexander.—Stevens.

Paint not a freezing night ; nor speckl'd bees
 Buz not about sweet Hybla's bloomy head.
 But what need millions, when some thousand serve ?

O, did my brother live ! we'd climb the Alps,
 Like brave Mulmutius' sons : make Romulus' wolf
 Howl horror in their streets, and Rome look pale,
 As when the Punic captain¹ ey'd her walls.

[March out.

CÆSAR, VOLUSENUS, &c.

CÆS. Are ye the men, who never fought in vain ?
 Who wear Bellona's favours in your scars ?
 Ay, ye are they. What then benumbs our spirits ?
 Our empire from Quirinus' narrow centre
 Doth circling spread, and finds no brink nor bottom.
 Titan no later sets nor earlier wakes,
 Than he beholds our provinces. Why, then,
 What privilege hath this place ? have we or they
 The Phrygian powers ? have they Palladium got ?
 No, no ; those gods our capitol keeps with joy ;
 These only have undaunted minds from Troy.

Enter Q. ATRIUS.

What news, good Atrius ?

ATRIUS. No good news from Atrius.
 When ominous earth with shade and cloudy
 vapours
 Had darkness doubled, storms began to sound,
 The dappl'd south, rough-footed Aquilo,
 Came rushing like two rams, whose steeled horns
 Dart fiery sparks : the clouds (crush'd) breathe out flames :
 Thunder and lightning daunt all ears and eyes :
 The winds and billows strive who loudest roar :

¹ Hannibal.—Stevens.

The sky distill'd in rain : his room to fill,
Ambitious waves would climb the starry hill.
Our ships are batter'd all, some forty sunk.

CÆS. What devil Cacus drags our fortune back !¹
Doth she move retrograde, and hoist us up,
That we may fall at height ? why doth Camillus
Each night torment my sleep, and cry revenge ?
I strive against the stream.

Enter ANDROGEUS, MANDUBRATIUS, Soldiers.

AND. Thus join we standards ; and resign the keys
Of Troynovant with all our warlike forces.

MAN. By me the Trinobants² submit, and Cenimagniaus,
Segontiacs, Ancalites, Bybrocs, and Cassians :
Six worthy nations do desire thy guard.

CÆS. All, all shall know our love.

MAN. The tyrant lies on Isis' flow'ry banks,
Where'a full choir sing of white surplic'd swans.
The ford's unlevel belly they have fenc'd
With sharp stakes under water.

CÆS. Nor stakes, lakes, fords, nor swords shall check our progress.

¹ Cacus stole the oxen of Hercules, and, that which way they went might not be discovered, drew them backwards into his den.—Stevens.

² See Caesar's "Commentaries," bk. v. s. 20, 21. The Trinobantes were those who inhabited Middlesex and Essex. The Cenimagnians, says Camden, were the same with the Iceni, whose province contained Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge-shire, and Huntingdonshire. Segontiacs, he thinks, were originally the Belge, and places them in the hundred of Holshot, in Hampshire; the Ancalites he calls those who inhabit the hundred of Henley, in Oxfordshire; the Bybrocks, that of Bray, in Berkshire; and the Cassians the people of Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, and Herefordshire, where the name is still preserved in the hundred of Cashow.

Those downy swans shall hear more funeral notes.
 Their kings departed, Nennius dead, whose loss
 Would tears extort even from pumicean eyes :
 Had Britain nurs'd but such another champion,
 They might have stuck their darts on our barr'd gates,

And Latium trembled with contrary fates.¹
 In what now lies their hope ?

MAN. Great numbers still remain : nay, worse, they laugh

At death, and boldly trust (as Druids preach)
 Their souls who die in fight shall live in joy.
 Hence count they dangers benefits, and die
 With freedom in their mouth and wilful rage.
 But let soft mildness wait on women ; let Thy wrath ring through the woods in dusty noise,
 To tell thy coming. No man's built so lofty,
 But his foundation meets the humble dust ;
 Which undermin'd, how high he pierc'd the clouds,

So deep he sinks.

Hostile and civil foes shake top and root,
 As winds invade above and mines below.
 And so will we.

CÆS. No doubt : this blow shall like an earthquake move

The roots and pillars of this sea-clipp'd isle.
 A cloud of vultures shall attend our camp,
 And no more shall the fields bear vert, but gules :²
 The grain, engrain'd in purple dye, shall lose
 His verdant hue. Bones, marrow, human limbs
 Shall putrifying reek, whose vapour'd slime,
 Kindl'd on high, may breed long-bearded stars,
 To tell more mischief, and outbeard Apollo.

¹ " Versis lugeret Græcia fatia."

—Steevens.

² Terms of heraldry, signifying green and red.

MAN. Let's waste no time, lest more unto him flock,
As humours glide to guard the wounded member.
CÆS. Atrius, let our ships be drawn on shore,
New-rigg'd and mended. I must needs confess
him
A darling of the gods, under whose colours
Stars, winter, sky, and tempests serve in pay,
And know both march and skirmish by his drum.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

ROLLANO, EULINUS hearkening.

ROL. O my dear lady, hast thou slain thyself?
So fairly pure, so kindly chaste, so—— [Cries.
A Venus and Diana mix'd in one.
She ate her meat with studs of pearl, she kiss'd
With rubies, and she look'd with diamonds bright.
Fish seas, and fowl the air, hunt all the earth,
For such another bit, and lose your labour.

EUL. O, why dost thou complain?

ROL. Had she not kill'd herself, no cruel Atro-pos,
No fury could for pity cut her thread.
She was the loadstone of all eyes, the whetstone
Of all brains, the touchstone of all hearts! she was—— [Cries.

EUL. O, my presaging thoughts in ugly form
Suggest some tragedy. Speak—yet stay awhile;
I know thou kill'st with speaking. Be then dumb:
Let sound ne'er give those notions airy robes.
Yet speak! despatch me; fear's as bad as death.
O, could no tongue affirm it! Is she dead?

ROL. My mistress is.

EUL. Wither, ye pleasant gardens, where she trod!

White lilies droop, and blasted daisies wink,
 And weep in pearly dew ! blind Vesper mourn ;
 Hang thy cold tears on ev'ry grassy blade !
 Groan loud, ye woods, and tear your leafy hair !
 Let wind and hoary frost kill every flow'r ;
 For she is gone who made continual May.
 Let foggy mists envelope sun and stars ;
 For she is gone who made perpetual day.
 Confounded nature, stand amaz'd ; dissolve
 Thy rolling engines, and unbrace the seas ;
 Fling all into their first disorder'd lump ;
 For thy chief paragon, thy rich masterpiece,
 The jewel for which thou didst venture all,
 Is lost, is lost ! And can I live to speak it ?
 How died she ?

ROL. By a poison'd draught.

EUL. The very word poison infects my breath.
 Durst thou presume to pass that coral porch ?
 Were not her lips sufficient antidote ?
 Durst thou descend through those close-winding stairs
 With treacherous intent ? How could thy venom
 Seize on her, and not (sweeten'd) lose his virtue,
 Or rather vicious quality ? may toads,
 Dragons, and mandrakes be thy gally-pots !
 This body was a casket for the graces.
 No cask for poison. With her dies all love.
 Cupid may break his bow, his arrows burn,
 Then quench his taper in a flood of tears.
 Is she dead ?

ROL. Or in a long trance ?

EUL. She may revive.

I'll visit her. Art may prolong her days,
 Whether she will or no.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

CHORUS.

1. *Alecto, rising from the lakes
Of night's sad empery,¹
With knotty bunch of curled snakes
Doth lash fair Brittany.*
2. *More ghastly monster did not spring
From the Hibernian flood :
With which Morvidus² combating,
Of foe became his food.*
3. *Shall no more shepherds in the shade
Sit whistling without care ?
Shall never spear be made a spade,
And sword a ploughing-share ?*
4. *Grant, heaven, at last that music loud
Of bloody Mars be still :
That Britain's virgins in a crowd
With hymns the sky may fill !*

2d Song.

*Nor is Landora's loss
The least part of our mournful muse :
Jove, Juno for to cross,
This Trojan dame for bride did choose.*

¹ [Dominion.]

² A tyrant who lost his life in encountering a monster that destroyed great numbers of people on the Irish coast. See Geoffrey of Monmouth, bk. iii. c. 15. The 4^o reads Morindus.

*Where she doth shine
'Bove Guendoline,¹
The amazon of her days :
And Mercia wise
Law to devise.
O, sound Landora's praise.*

*There doth she shine above,
Clear as great Delia's horned bow,
Bright as the queen of love,
To shoot down gentle beams below.
Sabrina, dare
Not to compare
With her most splendid rays :
A ring the sky
A gem her eye.
O, sound Landora's praise.*

ACT V., SCENE 1.

CÆSAR, ANDROGEUS, MANDUBRATIUS, &c.
Soldiers.

CÆS. Thus gain we ground ; yet still our foes will fight,
Whether they win or lose. With bloody drops
Our path is printed : Thames his maiden cheeks
Blush with vermillion. Nations crave our league
On every side ; yet still Cassibelane braves us,
Nor will submit.

AND. Not far hence Verulam lies, his chiefest
fort :
By nature guarded round with woods and fens,
By art enclosed with a ditch and rampier :
From hence we must dislodge the boar.

¹The wife of Lochrine. See Geoffrey of Monmouth, bk. ii. c. 4.

MAN. There are but two ways to assail this town, Both which I know. Your parted army must Break thorough both at once, and so distract
His doubtful rescues.

Enter VOLUSENUS, with HULACUS prisoner.

HUL. Draw, slaves unwilling ; I dare meet my death,
And lead my leader.

VOL. You'll repent anon.

HUL. If I do ill ; but not for suffering ill.

VOL. Your stoical apathy will relent, I know.
This priest I caught within a shady grove,
Devoutly kneeling at a broad oak's foot.
Now he awaits your doom.

CÆS. What God adore you ?

HUL. Him whom all should serve.

CÆS. What's the moon ?

HUL. Night's sun.

CÆS. What's night ?

HUL. A foil to glorify the day.

CÆS. What most compendious way to happiness ?

HUL. To die in a good cause.

CÆS. What is a man ?

HUL. An hermaphrodite of soul and body.

CÆS. How differ they in nature ?

HUL. The body hath in weight, the soul in length.

CÆS. One question more : What dangers shall I pass ?

HUL. Many by land and sea, as steps to glory.
Throw Palatine on Æsquiline, on both
Heap Aventine, to raise one pyramid for a Chair of estate, where thy advanced head,
Among those heroes pictur'd in the stars,

Orion, Perseus, Hercules, may consult
 With Jove himself: but shun the senate-house.
 March round about the Caspian sea; search out,
 'Mong cedars tall, th' Arabian phoenix' nest;
 Run counter to old Nile, till thou discover
 His sacred head wrapt up in cloudy mountains;
 And, rather than work fail, turn Hellespont
 Out of his channel; dig that isthmus down,
 Which ties great Afric—shun the senate-house.

*Be Saturn, and so thou shalt not be Tarquin.
 A Brutus strong
 Repays in fine
 The brutish wrong
 To Brutus' line.*

CÆS. We'll talk at leisure more. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS, &c.

CAS. No rampires keep him back: he presses
 forward,
 Though every stamp he treads seems to conjure
 The Fates from their infernal centre. None
 But he durst be so bold.

BEL. Yes, when Britons lead, and Mandu-brace, insulting
 With naked sword, calls on the lagging soldiers;
 When fierce Androgeus, with revolted nations,
 Ushers his army. No way half so quick
 To ruinate kingdoms as by homebred strife.
 Thus, while we single fight, we perish all.

CAS. Ay, ay, those treach'rous caitiffs! rebel slaves!
 O, may their country's heavy curse them sink
 Below the nine-fold brazen gates of hell!

That princock¹ proud !—ah, 'twas a 'scape in policy :
I should have slain the whelps with their good sire.

Let Britain's climacterical year now run,
The series break of seventy kings : nay, let
One urn conclude our ashes and the world's.
Befall what will, in midst of horror's noise
And crackling flames, when all is lost, we'll die
With weapons in our hands, and victory scorn :
There's none that die so poor as they are born.
Faithful Belinus, let a post command
The Kentish kings to set upon his fleet,
Whilst we here bate. Four thousand charioteers, (Such as did glide upon the Phrygian plains,
And (wheeling) double service do perform—
Both horseman's speed and footman's stable strength)
Still do remain : with these and flocking volun-taries
We'll give him once more battle. Let the captains
Enter and hear my charge.

Enter CAPTAINS. He stands on a throne.

Subjects and fellow-soldiers, we must now try
For ancient freedom or perpetual bondage :
There is no third choice. The enraged foe
(With cruel pride, proud avarice) hath spoil'd
From East to West, hunting for blood and gain.

¹ A coxcomb, or conceited person. So in "The Emperor of the East," act iv. sc. 1—

"I have a heart, yet
As ready to do service for my leg
As any princock, peacock of you all."

And again, "The Old Law," act iii. sc. 2—

"That wet one has cost many a princock's life."

See also Mr Steevens's note on "Romeo and Juliet," act i. sc. 5.

Your wives and daughters ravish'd, ransack'd towns,
 Great bellies ripp'd with lances, sprawling babes,
 The spouse, about her husband's neck, run through
 By the same spear. Think on these objects ;
 Then choose them for your lords, who spoil and burn
 Whole countries, and call desolation peace.¹
 Yield, yield, that he, ennobled by our spoils,
 May climb the capitol with triumphant car ;
 You led, fast-fetter'd, through the staring streets,
 For city dames to mock your habit strange,
 And fill their arras-hangings with our story.
 No : Brennus' ghost forbid ! who this night stood Before my eyes, and grimly furious spake :
 Shall Britain stoop to Roman rods and hatchets,
 And servile tribute ? will ye so defame
 Your ancestors, and your successors wrong,
 Heirs but of slavery ? O, this day make good
 The glory of so many ages pass'd
 I see you are incens'd, and wish to use
 Your weapons, not your ears.

ALL. To arms, to arms, to arms ! we'll fight and die. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

EULINUS *in a nightcap, unbraced. Viol, poynado.*²
Plays, and sings to the viol.

*So the silver-feather'd swan,
 Both by death and colour wan,*

¹ This sentiment, and many others in the course of the play, are borrowed : it is a translation from a very well known passage in Tacitus : solitudinem faciunt, &c.—Collier.

² i.e., Poignard, sword. So in "The Return from Parnassus"—

"Strikes his poynado at a button's breadth."

*Loves to sing, before she die,
Leaving life so willingly.
But how can I sing a note,
When dead hoarseness stops my throat ?
Or how can I play a stroke,
When my heart-strings are all broke ?*

Come, guilty night, and with black velvet wings
Mantle me round : let melancholic thoughts
Hang all my brain with blacks, this darksome grove,

My gallery. So, all things suit my mind :
Such funeral colours please a gasping heart.
I died with thee, Landora, once ; now only.
Some struggling spirits are behind, to be Laid out with most thrift on thy memory.
Where shall I first begin my last complaint,
Which must be measur'd by my glass of life ?
At thee, Hirildas, slain in furious mood,
By whose help only I enjoy'd my love ?
Or thee, Landora, dying for his sake,
And in thy death including mine ?
Or at my country's wreck, whose surface torn
Doth for my vengeance importune the pole ?
Or at myself ? Ay, there is sorrow's spring.
Shall I go wand'ring, lurk in woods unknown
(A banish'd hermit), and sigh out my griefs,
Teaching the pretty birds to sing, *My dear,
My dear Landora ?* There to feed on acorns,
Drink the clear fountain, and consume with weeping,

Were but an easy life, an easy death :
My violent passion must have sudden vent.
Refined soul, whose odoriferous light
The damned hags stare at, and whining elves,
Thinking it heaven in hell, behold my pangs,
Pity my dying groans, and be more soft.
O, may our shadows mingle ; then shall I

Envy no more those citizens above,
 The ambrosian juncates of th' Olympian hall,
 And all that gorgeous roof. But cowards talk.
 Come, thou last refuge of a wearisome life.

[Draws his poignard.

A passport to the Elysian laud, a key
 To unlock my griev'd inmate. Lo! I come.
 O, let this river from my eyes, this stream

[Unbuttons.

From my poor breast, beg favour of thy ghost :
 O, let this lukewarm blood thy rigour steep, [Stabs.
 And mollify thy adamant heart.

Leander-like, I swim to thee through blood :
 Be thy bright eyes my Pharos, and conduct me
 Through the dull night of gloomy Erebus.

Flow, flow, ye lively drops, and from my veins
 Run winding to the ocean of my bliss :

Tell her my love, and, if she still shall doubt,
 Swear that ye came directly from my heart.

I stay too long. [Stabs again.] Sweet lady, give me welcome.

Though I shall pass twelve monsters, as the sun,
 Or twelve Herculean labours on a row,

Yet one kind look makes all my labours sweet.

Thou fairy queen¹ of the Tartarian court,

To whom Proserpine may the apple give,

Worthier than she to warm old Pluto's bed ;

See thy poor vassal welt'ring in his gore.

I faint, I faint ;

I die thy martyr, as I liv'd thy priest :

Great goddess, be propitious ! sweet Landora—

[Falls and dies.

¹ Alluding to Spenser's celebrated poem.—Stevens.

SCENE IV.

The four Kings of Kent march over the stage. A drum struck up within. Q. ATRIUS comes with CINGETORIX prisoner. ROLLANO running; VOLUSENUS meets him.

ROL. What shall I do? how shall I 'scape?
[Falls for fear.]

VOL. I scorn to take advantage; rise and fight.

ROL. I had rather be kill'd quickly, quickly.

VOL. Then die, as thou desirest.

[Thrusts at him.]

ROL. O, let me wink first. [Bawls aloud.]

I shall never endure it. O, O, I am pepper'd and salted!

[Exit VOLUSENUS. ROLLANO crawls away.]

CASSIBELANUS, BELINUS, &c.

CAS. O, that base fortune should great spirits damp,

And fawn on muddy slaves! That envious fate
Should ripen villany with a Syrian dew,

And blast sweet virtue with a Syrian flame!

A catalogue of mischiefs do concur:

Our Briton Hector Nennius dead; our kings,

Angry to be refus'd, sit still at home;

And then those traitors with their train augment

His huge and expert army. Nothing stops him:

Rivers nor rampiers, woods nor dangerous bogs.

On this side Thames his dismal ensigns shine.

Last, Kent's unhappy rulers are at sea

O'erthrown, and our men almost spent. Then, general,

In desperate pride and valour's scornful rage,

Let us run headlong through their armed tents,

And make their camp a shambles ; so to raise
Our lofty tombs upon their slaughter'd heaps.

BEL. Nay, rather first let us parley for peace.

CAS. Ye country gods and nymphs, who Albion
love :

Old father Neptune : all ye powers divine :
Witness my loyal care ! If human strength,
Courage and policy could a kingdom save,
We did our best ; but discord, child of hell,
Numbers of train-men, and each captain pick'd
Out of a province, make us bow or break.
In vain we strive, when deities do frown ;
When destinies push, Atlas himself comes down.

Enter COMIUS.

BEL. No mediator is so fit as Comius :
And here's the man.

COM. Do not the dangers which
Environ you call for a good conclusion ?
Which I wish, as friend to both sides.

CAS. No, Comius. There is more behind than Cæsar

Hath overrun : our charioteers still drive ;
Our harness still is worn. Through woods and lakes

We'll tire his dainty soldiers ; then set fire
On towns, and sacrifice ourselves, our wives,
Our goods and cattle, in one public flame,
That wind may blow our ashes in his face.

COM. So shall dead el'ments curse your causeless fury :

Rather conclude some friendly peace.

CAS. Thus far we hear you. If with honour'd terms

And royal looks he will accept our faith,
We will obey, but never serve.

COM. I'll undertake as much.

[Exeunt.

VOL. XII.

2 L

SCENE V.

ANDROGEUS, TENANTIUS.

AND. Thus civil war by me and factious broils
 Deface this goodly land : I am reveng'd ;
 The cause (Eulinus) dead, my anger dies.
 He is our uncle, and in danger's mouth ;
 Both claim relenting pity. Whom peace made
 A rampant lion, war hath made a lamb.
 Cæsar shall not proceed, for private ends,
 To captivate our isle, whose clamorous curse
 Doth knock, I know, at heaven's star-nail'd gates :
 For that Jove's bird, imp'd¹ with our plumes, o'er-flew
 The ocean's wall, to seek her prey in Britain.

TEN. Ay, we have made a rod for our own backs :

Fetters of gold are fetters. No gap worse
 To let destruction in by, than to call
 A foreign aid who, having seen our weakness,
 And tasted once the fatness of our land,
 Is not so easily thrust out as admitted.
 Such medicine is worse than the malady :
 Fretting the bowels of our kingdom.

AND. I know their hatred just ; and here resign

All my birthright to thee, my second self.
 I must forsake my country's sight, and seek
 New fortunes with this emperor, in hope
 To be rais'd up by his now rising wheel.

TEN. O, do not so, dear brother ! so to part
 Were to divide one individual soul.
 Nor think me so ambitious. I can live
 A private life, and see a regal crown

¹ See note to "Albumazar," [xi. 346.]

With no more envy than I see the sun
 Glitter above me. Let not Lud's two sons
 Be parted by a sea. I hold your presence
 At higher price than a whole kingdom's pomp.
 Keep then your right ; like those admired twins,
 Let us rejoice, mourn, live, and die together.

AND. You shall a sceptre gain.

TEN. And lose a brother.

AND. Bear you the sovereign power of this land.

TEN. A body politic must on two legs stand ;
 I'll bear a part, so to diminish envy.

AND. I must away, and shun the people's eye.

TEN. If to yourself unkind, be kind to me ;
 For my sake stay at home ; why will you fly ?
 Think you a stepdame soil gives sweeter sap ?

AND. Ay, for trees transplanted do more goodly grow.

TEN. And I'll count men but stocks, when they do so.

AND. I am resolv'd, all troubles brought asleep,
 To leave you with a parting kiss.

TEN. And by that kiss

May I transfuse my soul or quite expire.
 Brothers have often for a kingdom fought ;
 We strive to lose it. This is holy strife.
 But here I vow, if e'er that sacred lace Shall gird my temples, Rome must keep her bounds,
 Or fish for tribute in the dreadful deep.

SCENE VI.

CÆSAR, MANDUBRATIUS.

AND. Let gracious favour smooth war's rugged
 brow ;

Cassibelane will compound ; all rage must end.
We choose you umpire for a friendly close.

CÆS. It is my glory to end all with peace ;
And for that cause I Comius sent in haste
For to conduct him hither.

TEN. This trump gives warning of the king's approach.

CASSIBELANUS, COMIUS, LANTONUS.

CAS. Fate, and no fault of mine, makes me appear
To yield, as far as honour gives me leave.

CÆS. Hail, valorous prince ! disdain not this ingrafting
Into Rome's empire, whose command encloses
The whole Levant, and whose large shadow hides
The triple-bounded earth and bellowing seas.

CAS. We shall observe your will, so you impose
A league—no yoke. [They shake hands.

CÆS. Thus we determine : that crown still shall stand :
Reign as the total monarch of this isle,
Till death unking you. 'Twere, Androgeus, best
You in our train kept honourable place ;
And let Tenantius wear the royal wreath.
You must forgive the towns which did revolt,
Nor seek revenge on Trinobants, but let Young Mandubrace possess his father's princedom.

CAS. Be all wrongs drench'd in Lethe.

AND. Pardon my rash attempts.

MAN. Count me your loyal friend.

[CASSIBELANUS embraces ANDROGEUS and MANDUBRATIUS.]

CÆS. In sign of league you shall us pledges give,

And yearly pay three thousand pound of silver
 Unto our treasury. So let these decrees Be straight proclaim'd through Troynovant, whose tower ¹

Shall be more fairly built at my charge, as
 A lasting monument of our arrival.

CÆS. All shall be done, renowned prince, whose worth,

Unparallel'd both as a friend and foe,
 We do admire.

Accept this surcoat, starrified with pearls
 And diamonds, such as our own shores breed.

CÆS. And you receive this massy cup of gold,
 Love's earnest and memorial of this day.
 By this suppose our senate calls you friend.

[They sit together.]

LAN. Now time, best oracle of oracles,
 Father of truth, the true sense doth suggest
 Of Dian's answer.

The lion and the eagle do design
 The Briton and the Roman states, whose arms
 Were painted with those animals ; both fierce,
 Weary at last, conclude : the semicircles,
 First letters of the leaders' names (we see)
 Are join'd in true love's endless figure.
 Both come of Trojan race, both nobly bold,
 Both matchless captains on one throne behold.

CÆS. Now the Tarpeian rock o'erlooks the world,
 Her empire bounded only by the ocean ;
 And boundless fame beats on the starry pole.
 So Danow, crawling from a mountain's side,
 Wider and deeper grows, and like a serpent
 Or pyramid revers'd, improves his bigness
 As well as length ; till, viewing countries large,

¹ The Tower of London, said to have been built by Julius Cæsar.

And fed with sixty rivers, his wide mouth
On th' Euxine sea-nymph gapes, and fear doth stir,

Whether he will disgorge or swallow her.

CAS. Since the great guide of all, Olympus'
king,

Will have the Romans his viceroys on earth ;
Since the red fatal eyes of crow-black night
Fling their malignant influence on our state ;

*Since Britain must submit ; it was her fame,
None but a Julius Cæsar could her tame.*

[While trumpets sound, ANDROGEUS and TEN-ANTIUS embracing, take leave. All depart.

SCENE VII.

CHORUS.

1st Song.

*Come, fellow-bards, and sing with cheer ;
Since dreadful alarms we shall no more hear.
Come, lovely peace, our saint divine,
Olive and laurel do love for to twine.
The Graces and Muses, and nymphs in a round :
Let voice beat the air, and feet beat the ground.*

*So hell's black image chas'd away,
Eos doth dandle the goldy-lock'd day ;
So, Bruma¹ banish'd all forlorn,
Cupid and Flora the spring do adorn :
And so, the grim fury of Mars laid in grave,
A merrier ending doth friendly peace crave.*

¹ [The winter solstice.]

2d Song.

*The sky is glad, that stars above
 Do give a brighter splendour :
 The stars unfold their flaming gold,
 To make the ground more tender :
 The ground doth send a fragrant smell,
 That air may be the sweeter :
 The air doth charm the swelling seas
 With pretty chirping metre :
 The sea with rivers' water doth
 Feed¹ plants and flowers dainty :
 The planets do yield their fruitful seed,
 That beasts may live in plenty :
 The beasts doth give both food and cloth,
 That men high Jove may honour :
 And so the world runs merrily round,
 When peace doth smile upon her.
 O then, then O ! O then, then O !
 This jubilee last for ever :
 That foreign spite or civil fight
 Our quiet trouble never. [Exeunt.*

MERCURY reducing the ghosts of CAMILLUS and BRENNUS.

CAM. How bravely Cæsar pass'd the angry main !

BREN. How bravely was he back repuls'd again !

CAM. How did he wheel his sword in Nennius'
 face !

BREN. How did he lose his sword, and fly apace !

CAM. How did again his army fill your coast !

¹ The 4^o has it—

“ The sea with rivers' water doth
 The plants and flowers dainty.”

—Collier.

BREN. Ay, when our princes did conduct his host.

CAM. How did they pierce through Isis' dangerous flood!

BREN. But made her swell, and bankrupt¹ with their blood.

CAM. Mirror of captains, Julius, still hath won.

BREN. But we may justly brag of two for one.

CAM. Confess, our valorous race hath now repaid

The Allian massacre² and our city's flame :
See how they yield, and yearly tribute pay.

BREN. No, proud dictator, both do weary stand
On equal terms : both wish a peaceful league.
But if they shall oppress, know, generous spirits
Will break this compact, like a spider's web.

MER. Jove's will is finish'd : and, though Juno frown,

That no more Trojan blood shall dye the stage,
The world's fourth empire Britain doth embrace.
The thunder-bearer with a Janus look

At once views ruddy morn and cloudy west :
Her wings, display'd o'er this terrestrial egg,
Will shortly hatch an universal peace ;
For Jove intends a favour to the world.

It now remains that you two martial wights
Cease from your braving one another's worth :
You must be friends at last. The close is sweet,
When, after tumults, hearts and hands do meet.

[Exeunt.]

Nec lusisse pudet, sed non incidere ludum.

¹ Or broken-banked with the flood.

² The slaughter made at the battle of Allia, in the year of Rome 363.

THE LOST LADY.

EDITION.

*The Lost Lady. A Tragdy Comedy. Imprinted at London by Jo. Okes, for John Colby, and are to be sold at his Shop, at the Signe of the Holy Lambe on Ludgate-hill.
1639. Folio.*

[Sir William Barclay or Berkley was probably related to Sir Richard Barclay, author of "A Discourse of the Felicity of Man," first printed in 1598. He wrote, besides the "Lost Lady," a "Description of Virginia." An account of him will be found in Bliss's edition of Wood's "Athenæ," iii. 1111-12.

"The Lost Lady" was reprinted by Dodsley in 1744, but excluded from the second and third editions of the collection.]

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.¹

Men.	Women.
LYSICLES.	MILEZIA.
EUGENIO.	HERMIONE.
AGENOR.	IRENE.
CLEON.	PHILLIDA.
ERGASTO.	ACANTHE.
PHORMIO.
PINDARUS.
PHYSICIAN.

¹ [Not in the old copy.]

THE LOST LADY.

ACT I.

Enter AGENOR, PHYSICIAN.

AGEN. Sir, I hope Lord Lysicles is not yet Retir'd ?

PHY. No, sir, he commanded immediate
Notice should be given of your coming.

AGEN. I fear my stay at the castle hath made
My duty seem unmannerly ; but till
This minute I had not my despatches from the governor.

PHY. Let it not trouble you : he never shuts his eyes
Till all this other world opens theirs ; nor Does he sleep then, but with distracted thoughts
Labours his fancy, to present him objects
That may advance his grief.

AGEN. What may the monstrous cause be ?

PHY. It was monstrous indeed. He lost his mistress,
Barbarously murder'd by her perfidious uncle :
Her urn is in Cirrha, which my lord nightly
Visits, and presents it all his contracted Sighs of the fled day ; but at his parting
Re-assumeth more by thinking she is not :
To whose dear memory his tears and griefs
Are offered. He's now alone, and the Religious awe which makes our priests retire,

 Before they do adore th' incensed powers,
 Is seen in him, who never dares approach
 Her honoured tomb, till a just contemplation of His loss hath made his sorrow eloquent.
 See ! he comes. If, when he parts, your haste
 Will license you, I will relate the story
 Of his unequall'd sufferings.

Enter LYSICLES.

LYS. Do you depart to-night ?

AGEN. This hour, my lord.

LYS. I will not wrong you to entreat your care
 In suddenly delivering these small packets ;
 But lest you should believe they are merely Ceremonious, and so bear any date, I now
 Inform you, I'm concern'd in nothing nearer.
 My griefs excepted.

AGEN. I wish your lordship's happiness.

LYS. First, wish me a captivity ; for as I am i' th' instant, if Heaven should pour
 His blessings on me, their quality would alter.
 Sir, good night. [Exit.

PHY. Sir, you are sad.

AGE. He has no heart to joy that can be otherwise,

That sees this glorious youth groan under his Harsh fate.

PHY. What a sad accent had each word he uttered ?

AGEN. I could not mark them much ; but his whole frame

Is of such making as if Despair had been
 The architect. We may wish, [but] not hope,
 A long life in him.

PHY. Sir, will you now take horse ?

AGEN. I should, had you
 Not promised the original of this Misfortune : and, trust me, it is a bold
 Curiosity, that makes me search into it ; for if
 The silent presentation hath struck amazement
 In me, how shall I guard my heart, when sad
 Disasters violence my passions ?

PHY. Thus then in short :—

These noble kingdoms, Thessaly and Sparta,
 Have, from the time two kings commanded all,
 Under both titles still been emulous,
 And jealous of th' advantages which each
 Suspected might be in the adverse party.
 This caused a lasting war ; but the fierce storm
 Threaten'd not till the reign of these two kings,
 Both crowned young, both of an equal age ;
 Both having all the passions of their subjects,
 Their fears excepted. The ambassadors
 That should congratulate the new-made kings,
 As if one spirit had inspired both,
 Came with this message, little varied—
 “ That each were joy'd in such an enemy ;
 No more the fearful wisdom of old men Should rust their swords, that fate had given to one

Command of all.” In short, their forces met,
 And in ten bloody days none could decide
 Which had the better cause :
 The virtues of each prince so prevalent,
 Fortune was but spectator. To conclude,
 Urgent affairs at home compell'd each king
 To leave their armies. Ours committed his
 To Strimon, father of Prince Lysicles ;
 The Duke of Argos did command the Spartan,
 Who, swoll'n with the great name of general,
 Before his king had hardly left the fight
 Of this great army, draws his forces out,
 And fac'd us in our trenches. 'Tis not yet

Unquestion'd whether fear or policy
 Made Strimon keep in his : but certainly this,
 That virtue, sharpen'd by necessity,
 Procur'd our triumph. Here Lysicles
 Anticipated years unto his fame,
 And on the wounds of his brave enemy
 Did write his story, which our virgins sing.
 But from this conquest did begin the cause
 Of all his misery.

AGEN. How from this? unless the king should judge it

Too dangerous an honour to be given to one.

PHY. He's lord of so much virtue,
 He cannot fear it in a subject.

AGEN. And as the common voice reach'd him in Athos,

There's none he looks on with [a] greater
 Demonstration of his love.

PHY. I know not that ; but this I am perfect in :
 His judgment is directed by the king so powerfully,

He cannot think his virtues injured,
 Though many should be nearer in his graces,
 'Twould afflict him strangely if any should
 Be thought to love his prince better than he.

AGEN. Pardon my interruption : pray proceed.

PHY. The duke, defeated, posts unto the Court,
 Where he design'd unto his dire revenge
 Th' obscurest path that ever time reveal'd
 Since her first glass : procures his king to throw Neglects upon him, and to seem in doubt
 Of his obliged faith. A severe search
 Is made on his papers, his treasure valued
 By the public officer, and himself,
 Twice apprehended in a seeming flight,
 Calumniated, libell'd, and disgrac'd
 By his own seeking and belief of others,

Who, judging him to be their honour's ruin,
 First raze his house, and then demand his life
 As sacrifice unto their brothers, sons,
 Nephews, and public loss. Sedition
 Had now the face of piety, which (once Receiv'd as just) can hardly be repell'd.
 The king with difficulty doth assure his life
 With promise of his banishment.

This he foresaw and sought, and did disguise
 Himself, in fear of the incensed people :
 Parts in the night, and partner of his fate
 Hath his fair niece, who is so innocent
 She cannot think there is a greater crime
 Practis'd by men than error, which does make Us seem more vicious than in act we are.

AGEN. I want a perspective for this dark mystery ;
 And but your knowledge doth dissolve my doubts,
 'Twould seem a riddle that a gentleman
 Of his known valour [and his] reputation
 Should strive to lose both for some secret end,
 I cannot yet arrive to.

PHY. Sir, you know
 Revenge doth master all our passions
 That are not servants to her rage.

AGEN. But how, unfriended, banish'd, the reproach
 Of traitor fix'd upon him, he could find
 The way unto't more easy, I am ignorant.

PHY. This story will resolve you. To this Court
 He comes : is brought to th' king ; then with a modest freedom
 Relates his sufferings ; hopes that fame hath taught

His story ere his coming, else he should Continue miserable, as believ'd
 Both by his friends and enemies a traitor.
 Delivers that he sought protection
 From him, because none else could vindicate

His innocence, which many mothers here,
 Say'th he, have wept that day when fortune
 Consulted fate who should be conqueror.
 You brave lords (say'th he) that were present, did my sword

Parley? Did you receive wounds on condition?
 Were these by compact? All my blood is lost,
 Since 'tis discredited; what before was spent,
 Ran in my name, and made that live: but now,
 Great King, you only repeal my honour's fall
 By giving death unto your enemy.

Our prince resents his fate, confirms him his
 By a large pension, and too soon entrusts [him]
 With all his secrets; gives him means to view
 His forts, which he designs, and learns the strength
 Of each particular province; and (inform'd
 Of all) makes his escape, and is received
 Of the Spartan king with all remonstrances
 Of love and confess'd service; but before
 He parted, did that horrid act which Lysicles Must die for.

AGEN. Indeed this story
 Doth not much concern him, if I mistake not.

PHY. At his arrival here, he left his niece
 With this design, that, when his plots were ripe,
 Without suspect he might come to the borders.
 Hither he comes, and at his entrance is
 By a base traitorous servant certified
 Of the great love 'twixt her and Lysicles.
 The compact of their vows, with divers letters
 The lovers had exchange'd. He storms and cries,
 If thou dost love young Lysicles, my hate Shall strike thee dead; thy hand pluck'd back my honour

When it was mounting; be constant, and this hand

Shall by her death give thee a ling'ring one,
 And my revenge in thy own house begin.

Then with a barbarous unheard-of cruelty
 Murders his niece, and the same instant flies.
 Fame had the next sun blown this through the city ;
 His house was searched, the trunk of the dead
 lady
 Found in the hall ; the head he carried with him,
 In honour of his cruelty.

AGEN. Sure, he was mad !

PHY. I would say so too, but that I would not Make him less guilty of this inhumanity.

AGEN. What furies govern man ! We hazard
 all

Our lives and fortunes to gain hated memories ;
 And in the search of virtue tremble at shadows.
 But how are you ascertain'd that he did
 This horrid act ?

PHY. He sent the summons of her death
 By her that had betray'd her ; the report
 Did make her spirits throng unto her heart,
 And (sure) had kill'd it, had not heaven decreed
 His hand should be as black as his intent.
 She begg'd some time for prayer, and retir'd ;
 In her own blood did write her tragedy
 And parting wishes to her dear betroth'd.
 Now hear the strangest mistook piety,
 That ever entered in a virgin's breast,
 She so much lov'd this barbarous homicide.
 She would not have him guilty of her death ;
 And therefore with her own hands wounds herself,
 And as she bled, she writ unto her lord—
 At last concludes—

They will not let me make them innocent ;
 I'm call'd unto my death, and I repent
 My wound, because I would not hurt
 That which I hope you lov'd. This bloody note
 Was found the next day in her pocket.

AGEN. And came it to the Lord Lysicles ?

PHY. It did ; and if you e'er had seen
 A hundred parents at one time deplore
 The unexpected deaths of their lost children,
 The father's sorrow and the mother's tears—
 'Twould emblemise, but not express his grief.
 Sometimes he shriek'd, as if h' had sent his soul
 Out in his voice ; sometimes stood fix'd, and gaz'd,

As if he had no sense of what he saw :
 Sometimes he'd swoon ; and if the memory
 Of his dear mistress, even i' th' gates of death,
 Had not pursu'd him, he had certain died.
 Torment did now give life ; at last he drew
 His sword, and e'er he could be stay'd, did fall Upon the point. This I think did preserve
 him ;

For, not¹ being mortal, and he fainting with
 The loss of blood, had not then strength enough
 To end himself, until he was persuaded
 To live, to celebrate her memory ;
 Which nightly he doth do upon her tomb,
 Whither he now is gone.

AGEN. I have not heard
 Of such a love as this !

PHY. Nor ever shall
 Of such a beauty as did cause it.
 'Tis late, and I'll not trouble you with her story :
 When you're at Court, all tongues will speak her merit

To your wonder. I'll bring you to your horse.

[Exit.

¹ [i.e., The wound not being, &c.]

[ACT I., SCENE 2.]

*The Tomb discovered. Enter LYSICLES with a page and a torch, [and then withdraws.]*¹

Enter ERGASTO and CLEON.

CLE. And will you marry now ?

ERG. Indeed will I.

CLE. And what shall

Be done with all those locks of hair you have ?

ERG. Why, I'll make buttons of 'em, and had they half

The value that I swore they had when I did beg 'em,
Rich orient diamonds could not equal them :
Some came eas'ly, and some I was forc'd to Dig for in th' mine.

CLE. And your priz'd liberty—

What shall become of that ?

You swore you would not marry till there were
A law established that married men
Might be redeem'd, as slaves are.

ERG. I was an ass when I talk'd so :

Those damned books of chastity I read
In my minority corrupted me ; but since
I'm practis'd in the world, I find there are No greater libertines than married men.
'Tis true 'twas dangerous, this knot, in the
First age, when it was a crime to break vows :
But, thanks to Venus, the scene is alter'd,
And we act other parts. I'll tell thee
The privileges we enjoy when we are married.
First, our secrecy is held authentic, which is Assurance will take up any woman

¹ [This is the second scene of Act i., though not so marked. The entrance of Lysicles, with his page and torch, was in dumb-show, the tomb having been apparently placed in the back of the stage while the curtain was drawn.]

At interest, that is not peevish ; then th' acquaintance which our wives bring us, to whom at times I carry my wife's commendations ; and if their husbands be not at home, I do commend myself.

CLE. For what, I prythee ?

ERG. For a good dancer, a good rider, a good —, anything that I think will please 'em.

CLE. Thou'lt have a damnable conceit of thy wife, by thy knowledge and opinion of all other women, unless you think her a phoenix.

ERG. 'Twill be my best resolution. But hark in thy ear, rogue : I could be content to think, and wish mine and all for the public good, and wear my horns with as much confidence, as the best velvet-head of 'em all, and paint them in my crest with this inscription These he deserved for his love to the commonwealth.

CLE. A rare fame you would purchase !

ERG. A more lasting one than any monument you can repeat the epitaph of ; and would it not be glorious to be commemorated as the first founder of the commonalty of undisparaged cuckolds ?

CLE. Yes, and prayed for by bastards, that got better fathers than they were destined to by their mothers' marriages.

ERG. And cursed by surgeons that were undone by honest women's practices.

CLE. And this done voluntarily, which you will hardly avoid, though you have a thousand guards to prevent it. I, that have been your playfellow, shall be first suspected, and first banished.

ERG. By Jupiter, never ! No, though 'twould preserve a thousand smooth foreheads. If she be honest, your arts cannot alter her ; and if otherwise, had I not rather adopt a son of thine than a stranger's ? And confess truly, Cleon : would you not for this public benefit be content to sacrifice a sister, that we might love no longer by obligations, but affection ; and seeing, liking, and enjoying, finished in a meeting.

CLE. Unless I had means to appropriate one, you cannot suspect but I should wish a title unto all. But what hopes have you of your mistress ?

ERG. No airy ones of liking and affection ; but mine are built on terra firma already, which her father looks on greedily, and proportions this to that grandchild, to the second this.

CLE. Is he not somewhat startled at the report of thy debauchery ? For though your thickset woods and spreading vineyards make excellent shades to keep away the sun—I mean the piercing eye of censure—yet some suspicions common fame will raise.

ERG. Indeed it was my enemy, whilst my elder brother lived.

CLE. But since his death you are altered. I must confess it, for then the slenderness of your annuity allowed you but the election of some one sin : I mean a cherished sin, whilst the others repined, that thought themselves of equal dignity ; in time they had their turns, yet singly still : but since your brother's death you have shown yourself a grateful gentleman, and recompensed those that have suffered for you to the full.

ERG. A pretty satire this, to whip boys of nine ! Yet still I tell thee, I am another in the opinion of the world.

CLE. Another Heliogabalus thou wouldst be, Hadst thou his power ; but by what conjuration can You bring me to think it ?

ERG. By reason, which is a spirit will hardly be Rais'd in you ; but thus it is. Whilst my brother Liv'd, my wildness was observed by—

CLE. But now you walk in shades, recluse, and shut

Up in your coach ; your painted liveries Supposed fairies, and she that you were wont to Visit by the name of Madam Ruffiana is now
 Your aunt. All this I am perfect in, yet cannot Reach the mystery of your suppos'd disguise
 You say doth mask you.

ERG. Hear me, and be converted. I say I was Observed by those that were nearest in blood to
 me ;

And with fear, too, lest the ruin of my
 Fortune might force them to supply my wants.
 This caus'd the ague, this the admonitions and Frequent counsels—sometimes severe reproofs,
 Every one curling himself from any hopes of mine,

That would assist me ; and those gave largest counsels,

That would give nothing else.

CLE. Of this I am yet a sad party and a witness too.

ERG. Since my brother's death, the names of things

Are changed ; my riots are the bounties of my nature,

Carelessness the freedom of my soul :

My prodigality, an easiness of mind proportion'd
 To my fortune. Believe me, Cleon, this poverty
 Is that which puts a multiplying-glass upon our Faults, and makes 'em swell, and fill the eye ;

Our crimes cry highest then when they have brought us low.

CLE. I have not known any condemn'd for playing,

But for losing.

ERG. True ; and let it be thy rule for all things else.

CLE. If this be certain, 'twill be long ere I be reputed virtuous.

ERG. Thou'lt never be, unless it be this way,
I prophesy, good Cleon——

CLE. 'Tis a sad story ; pray let us leave it. Have you no rivals ?

ERG. None present that I can fear, having her Father's firm consent.

CLE. Eugenio, your rival, still continues banish'd.

ERG. And I hope will, till I am full possess'd of Hermione.

CLE. Did you give him cause to draw upon you in th' garrison ?

ERG. Nor knew then of any¹ offence, or his pretences,

Which his folly look'd I should divine ; he met me
on the guard,

And drew upon me. We had a little scuffle,
Were parted, and he banish'd for the insolence.

CLE. Prince Lysicles labours to recall him.

ERG. By all means ; he was by in the nois'd battle, saw the

Prince cleave this man to the twist,² divide a second,
Overthrow a third ; he is his trumpet.

CLE. His actions need none.

ERG. Wilt thou be happy, Cleon, believe not fame
So far, as to make thyself less than another man.
There were thousands that served for six sesterces,
That did more than both ; yet sleep forgotten. 'Tis
Now time to meet the ladies on the walk. [Exeunt.]

Enter LYSICLES ;³ kneels to the tomb, and then speaks.

LYS. I do profane this place, for were my griefs
As great as I would boast 'em, I could not live

¹ [Old copy, any of.]

² [Fork, Fr. fourchure.]

³ [He must be supposed, from the preceding direction, to have been in the back of the stage.]

To tell them to the world.
 Or is the passage which my soul should make,
 Shut up with sorrow? 'Tis so, and a joy,
 A hopeful joy, to meet her must give freedom
 To my sad prisoner, when my hand shall lead
 This dagger to his heart that parted ours.
 And heaven, that hear'st this vow, pour on my head
 Dire thunder, if I shrink in what I promise.
 And, sacred'st saint, if from thy place of rest,
 Thou turn'st thy eyes upon thy holy relics,
 Accept my vows, and pardon me the life
 Of the curs'd homicide: a full revenge
 Of thy death and [of] my life's misery
 Shall make him pay the time he has outliv'd
 My happiness; and when he is fall'n,
 Present thyself in all thy glories to me,
 That my freed soul may owe her liberty
 To no force, but impatient longing
 Of re enjoying thee. And, holy tomb,
 The altar where my heart is nightly offered,
 Let my wing'd love have passage through thy marble,
 And fan the sacred ashes, knowing no heat
 But what he takes from them. So peace and rest Dwell ever with thee. [Exit.

Enter HERMIONE, IRENE, PHILLIDA, all veiled.

IRE. Dear Hermione, pinch me, or I shall sink with laughter.

HER. What said the stranger, Phillida? I did not hear it.

PHIL. Nothing, madam.

HER. Then he did talk by signs, he was long about it. What was't, Irene?

IRE. He long importuned her to show her face, which after many urgings she consented to; and he in recompense made a low reverence to her, and then thanks her for the great favour, and concludes he never did receive so great a one from any woman, since all else have done them with a reference to themselves; but hers was merely goodness, for, before he saw her, he might have suspected her face, handsomely hid, for a piece of beauty, if her virtue would have suffered him to be longer in that error.

PHIL. I would I were a man for his sake.

IRE. So you told him, and he, still courteous for all your anger, promised to give you what you wanted of a man, or teach you how to make one.

HER. Thou wilt never be old, wench, if thou still keep'st this humour.

IRE. Not a sigh older these seven years, if't please Sir Cupid; for he blows our bellows. [Enter ERGASTO and CLEON.] But look, yonder's your servant, there's no starting now; you must stand to't. But before he comes to interrupt us, observe with me, how in that deep band, short cloak, and his great boots, he looks three storeys high, and his head is the garret where he keeps nothing but lists of horse-matches, and some designs for his next clothes.

PHIL. Where is his cellarage?

IRE. He'll show it thee himself, dear Phillida, and thine too, if thou wilt have him! But they make to us!

ERG. Madam, will you honour me and this gentleman with a sight of that which doth enrich the world?

HER. You will not take our excuses, if we should say you find us now with more advantage to our beauties.

ERG. So breaks the morning forth, but the sun's rays are not so quick and piercing as your eyes, for they descend even to our hearts.

IRE. Heaven defend! my heart would tremble, if they should.

ERG. Why, madam?

IRE. See such impieties as are lodged there in a man, and not be struck with horror! 'tis impossible.

ERG. Your wit doth make you cruel. But, madam, I have something to deliver unto you, which your father commanded no ear should hear but yours.

IRE. What have you there, Cleon?

CLE. Verses, madam.

IRE. Whose?

CLE. Of Lord Ergasto's, written in celebration of the fair Hermione.

IRE. Did he buy them, or found them without a father, and has adopted them for his own?

CLE. They are his own.

IRE. Here.

CLE. I pray read them.

IRE. What have I deserved of you, good Cleon, that you should make me read his verses in his own presence? If you think I have not already as ill an opinion of him as I can have, you lose your labour.

CLE. Read them, and I'll assure you you'll find things well said and seriously; and you will alter your opinion of him.

IRE. Pray give them me, I long to be working wonders. [She reads single words.] Rubies, Pearls, Roses, Heaven. Do you not think he has done my cousin a simple favour, comparing of her voice to that of heaven?

CLE. 'Tis his love makes him do it; not finding any thing on earth fit to express her, he searcheth heaven for a similitude.

IRE. Alas! good gentleman, 'tis the first time he ever thought on't; what frequent thunders should

I hear, if 'twere as he would have it? Let me counsel you: lay them aside till they have contracted an inch of dust, then with your finger write their epitaph, expressing the mutual quiet they gave men, and received from them; or, as all poisons serve for some use, give them your physician, and let him apply them to his patient for a vomit—this way they may be useful.

CLE. However you esteem them, such an elogy would make you think your glass had not yet flattered you.

IRE. It cannot; I prevent it, and accuse it for not showing the hills of snow, the rubies, and the roses they say have being from me. But stay—heaven opens, and I see a tempest coming; your poet is a prophet.

HER. I'll call an oath to be my witness.

ERG. Madam!

HER. My own fears light upon me, if the night that eves the day of marriage, doth not shut me from the world.

ERG. Why, madam, this intemperance?

HER. 'Tis a just anger.

ERG. If you are angry, madam, with all that love you, there lives none that has more enemies, every eye that looks upon you you must hate.

IRE. Sir Cleon, our friends are engaged; pray let us be o' th' party. What has called up this choler in my sweet cousin? My lord, you have been begging favours.

ERG. Yes, of heaven, that it would furnish me with merits fit to deserve your cousin.

IRE. When it has [been] granted you, return to her, and renew your suit; but if you stay till then, you must get spectacles to see her beauty with.

HER. Why should you hinder your repose and mine? You know I never loved you.

IRE. Then he has no reason to accuse you of inconstancy.

ERG. Why are you fair? or why has my stars enforced me to love nothing else?

IRE. If your love were considerable, what an obligation had your cousin to your stars? Then these remonstrances of yours are impulsive, and not voluntary.

ERG. I cannot tell; but when I seriously direct them to you, I'll swear I am bewitched.

CLE. Madam, this is repugnant to your other virtues, that you should hate a man for loving you. Before he did profess himself your servant, I know you did receive him with indifferency at least. Whence then proceeds your hate?

HER. From his expression of his love.

CLE. A cruel son sprung from so mild a father, if he did urge you to anything, might blast your honour.

IRE. She would not hear him; and as it is, how much does he oblige her? He's now her servant, and would entreat her to let him be her master; a request strangely modest!

CLE. If I were he, I'd take an honourable composition, let her choose whom she pleas'd for husband, and continue her secret servant still.

HER. You are uncivil.

Enter PINDARUS.

CLE. Pardon me, madam, this mirth's a liberty; your cousin doth allow me. Here comes your father. [PINDARUS whispers with ERGASTO: he speaks to HERMIONE.

PIN. How long is't you have undertaken to be your own disposer?

HER. Sir!

PIN. After ^{thy} cares had sought you out a man that brings all blessings that the world calls happy, you must refuse him!

HER. Sir, I have taken an oath.

PIN. I know the priest that gave it. Do you not blush, being so young, to know how to distinguish the difference of desires? And this so wildly, that you will put off your obedience rather than lose one that you dare not say hath interest in you; but by my hopes of rest, I'll use the power custom and nature give me to force you to your happiness.

Enter LYSICLES.

LYS. How now, my lord? What miracle can raise a tempest here, where so much beauty reigns?

PIN. My lord, you are not practised in the cares of fathers; I thought to have seen this gentleman my son to-morrow; and she does refuse him. But—

LYS. It must not be; pardon me, virtue, that I begin an act will set a stain upon my blushing brow. Yet I must thorough. Lord Pindarus, my fortunes carry a pardon with them, when they make me err in acts of ceremonial decencies, they have been so heavy and so mighty, they have bent me so low to th' earth, I could not cast my face upwards to hope a blessing; the cause you are perfect in.

PIN. 'Tis a noble sorrow; but your deep melancholy gives it too large a growth.

LYS. Thus all do press it; yet had my grief relation only to myself, I would not part them from; my heart and memory they justly do possess. But my father hath no more issue save myself, for to confer his name and fortunes on.

PIN. Our Greece would mourn if such a glorious stock should end in the most flourishing branch.

LYS. If you do wish it a continuance, 'tis in your power to make it last to ages. Since my Milesia's death, I have not loved a lady equal with your Hermione; in her I hope to lose my swollen misfortunes, and find out a joy that may extinguish them. 'Tis now no time to tell her how much I am her servant; for this lord here, that does pretend to her fair graces, before I had declared myself his rival—perchance you would believe me if I had said, he no way doth deserve her.

PIN. Where you pretend, who can? But heaven, that designed a blessing to my child, it had been pride to hope for, hath made her still averse to his pretences; but giving her the liberty of refusing, I know he is removed.

LYS. Thus then to-morrow I'll wait on you. Ladies, I am your servant. [Exit.]

PIN. My Lord Ergasto, you see with how much candour I have embraced your love; yet, though I do put on a father's strictness in my daughter's presence, I cannot force her to an act whereon for ever will depend her happiness. My house shall still be open to you as my heart. My business calls me, get you home; your servant.

[Exit PINDARUS.]

CLE. Ergasto, my Lord Ergasto, what, have you left your tongue with your heart?

ERG. Is she not strangely fair?

CLE. You'll not believe me if I should say the contrary.

ERG. D'ye think that there are such faces in Elysium?

CLE. I'm sure many better go t'other way, if they be not marred in the voyage. But do you remember where you are to meet with Phormio?

ERG. Nor anything else ; her beauty makes me forget all things that has no reference to it.

CLE. Heyday ! if within these two hours you do not forget the cause of this forgetfulness, I'll be an eunuch. What, if the prince should be your rival ? I cannot tell, but my Lord Pindarus on a sudden fell from his anger to his daughter to a ceremony to you might be suspected.

ERG. 'Tis a fear that makes me tremble.

CLE. Courage, man ! If you have not lost your memory, your remedy is certain. There are more handsome faces will recompense this loss. Let us meet Phormio. [Exeunt.

ACT II., SCENE 1.

Enter HERMIONE, IRENE, and PHILLIDA.

IRE. Have you sent for the Egyptian lady ?

HER. I have ; and she'll be here within this half-hour.

IRE. She speaks our language.

HER. Her father was of Greece a wealthy merchant, and his business enforcing him to leave his country, he married a lady of that place, where he lived, who, excellent in the mystery of divination, hath left that knowledge to her daughter, enriched with thousand other modest virtues, as is delivered to me by those are frequent with her.

IRE. Do you believe what Phillida say'th is the voice of all your friends ?

HER. What is't ?

IRE. That you shall marry with Prince Lysicles.

PHIL. I heard your uncle say the governor did receive it with all appearances of joy, in hope this match will free him from this deep melancholy : and 'tis determined the next feast joins your hands.

HER. The grave must be my bed then.
 With what harsh fate doth heaven afflict me,
 That all those blessings which make others happy
 Must be my ruin! But if this lady's knowledge
 Shall inform me that I shall ne'er enjoy Eugenio, Darkness shall seize me, ere [the] tapers light
 My blushes to the forsworn Hymen's rites.

IRE. Why should you labour your disquiet, cousin?

Anticipating thus your knowledge, you will make
 Your future sufferings present; and so call Lasting griefs upon you, which your hopes might Dissipate, till heaven had made your mind
 Strong enough to encounter them.

HER. Dear Irene,
 Our stars, whose influence doth govern us,
 Are not malignant to us, but whilst we Remain in this false earth. He that hath courage
 To divest himself of that, removes with it
 Their powers to hurt him; and injur'd Love,
 Who sees that fortune would usurp his power,
 I know will not be wanting. See, the lady

Enter ACANTHE the Moor.

Comes! Madam, the excuse that justifies sick men
 That send for their physician, must beg my pardon,
 That did not visit you to have this honour.
 Here you see a virgin that hath long stood
 The mark of fortune, and now's so full of misery
 That, though the gods resented what I suffer,
 Yet I fear that they have plung'd me to extremes,
 Exceed their own assistance.

MOOR. Fear not their power.

HER. I do not; but their will to help me I must doubt;

For those that know no reason of their hate
Must fear it is perpetual.

And let the ensigns of their wrath fall on me,
If e'er by any willing act I have provok'd
Their justice. To you now, in whom 'tis said,
As in their oracle they speak, I come to know
What mighty growth of dangers are decreed me.

MOOR. First, dearest lady, do not think my power

Great as my will to serve you ; 'tis so weak
That, if you should rely on't, I shall seem Cold in your service, when it does not answer
What is expected from it. All I know
Is but conjectured ; for our stars incline, Not force us in our actions. Let me observe your face.

HER. Do, and if yet you are not perfect in Your mysteries, observe mine well ; and when you meet

A face branded with such a line, conclude
It miserable : when an eye that doth
Resemble this, teach it to weep betimes,
That so being lost, it may not see those miseries
Must be its only object. [The MOOR starts.]

Are my misfortunes of that horrid shape
That the mere speculation doth affright
Those whose compassion only it concerns ?
I, that must stand the strokes then, what defence Shall I prepare against them ? Yet a hope
That they be ripen'd now to fall on me,
Lightens a desperate joy to my dark soul :
For the last dart shall be embrac'd as remedy
To cure my former wounds.

MOOR. It is not that ;
I was surpris'd in considering I must Partake of all your fortunes ; for our ascendants
Threaten like danger to us both.

HER. Are then my miseries grown infectious too ?

Must that be added? Pardon me, gentle lady;
this

Sad crime I must account amongst my secret faults:

I meant no more but to communicate,
Not part my sorrows with you.

MOOR. [O,] would you could; with what great willingness

Should I embrace a share of what afflicts you?
I'd haste to meet and ease you of your fears.

Now if to one, whose interest doth force her
To advance your hopes, you dare deliver

The cause of your disquiet, you shall find a closet,
If not a fort, to vindicate your fears.

HER. You shall know all. I have exchange'd my heart

With a young gentleman's, now banished
His country and my hopes; his rival labours
To make me his; my father resolute I should Consent, till fortune chang'd, but lessen'd not
My sufferings; for our prince, Lysicles,
Ruins me with the honour of his search.

MOOR. Does Eugenio know you love him?

HER. No.

MOOR. Why does he doubt it?

HER. A womanish scorn to have my love reveal'd,

Made me receive his declaration of it
As an affront unto my honour; and when He came to take his leave, I left him
In the opinion I would obey my father.

MOOR. I have heard as much; but [these] contradictions

In the prince's actions do amaze me:

They say he loves your friend, and labours now
For to recall him; and that every night
He courts his former flame, hid in the ashes
Of his lost mistress.

HER. By this judge how miserable I am ?
 That my malignant stars force them to change
 Nature and virtue too, that else would shine
 Unmoved, like the star that does direct
 The wand'ring seaman. Must then nature
 change,
 And will not fortune cease to persecute ? Good gods !

I will submit to all but breach of faith.

MOOR. They will not hear us, madam, unless we

Contribute to their aid our best endeavours.

I have thought a way may for a time secure you ;
 You must dissemble with the prince, and seem
 To love Ergasto.

'Tis not impossible, but he, seeing you
 Prefer one so far beneath him, may provoke
 A just neglect from him. Then for Ergasto,
 Besides the time you gain, there may succeed
 A thousand ways to hinder his pretence.

HER. Can my heart e'er consent my tongue should say,

I am for any other but Eugenio ?

No, my dear love, though cruel fate hath sever'd
 My vow'd embraces, yet hath death ice enough
 To fright all others from them.

MOOR. I see love is a child still ; what a trifle Doth now disturb him ! You will not get your health

At the price of saying you are sick. I know
 There is another remedy more proportion'd
 For your disease, but not for you that suffer,
 Which is this :

Tell the prince that you're engag'd, but he
 That broke with vows and friendship for your
 love,

Will not desist for such suppos'd slight lets ;
 And then your father will force you t' his will.

HER. If the prince leave me, it is most certain He'll use his power to make me take Ergasto.

MOOR. Those that in dangers that do press them nearly,
Will not resolve upon some hazard, and Give leave to chance to govern what
Our knowledge cannot hinder, must sit still,
And wait their preservation from a miracle.

HER. I am determin'd ; for knives, fire, and seas
Shall lose their qualities, ere fate shall make Me his : and if death cannot be Shunn'd, I will meet it boldly.

Enter IRENE.

IRE. Cousin, the prince is come to see you.

MOOR. Good madam, use some means that I may speak
With him before he goes : my heart doth promise
I shall do something in your service ; and
Be sure, when he first speaks of love, seem not
To understand him. [Exit.

ACT II., SCENE 2.

Enter LYSICLES.

LYS. Madam, I've begg'd leave of your noble father to Offer up myself a servant to your virtues.

HER. It is a grace our family must boast of
That you descend to visit those that style Themselves your creatures, made such by your goodness,
Which we can only pay by frequent prayers,

That your line may last as glorious to Posterity, as your now living fame is.

LYS. Madam, you were not wont by a feign'd praise
To scorn those that admire you ; or would you
Thus insinuate what I should be by telling Me I am, what I must ever aim at ?

HER. Were there proportion 'twixt our births, my lord,
'Twould ill become a virgin's mouth to utter,
How much you do deserve ; that will excuse,
When I shall say our Greece ne'er saw your equal.

LYS. I did not think I ever could be mov'd
With my own praise ; but now my happiness
So much depends, that you shall truly think
What now you utter of me ; that I glory
My actions are thus favour'd by your judgment.

HER. We must forget our safeties and the gods,
Whose instrument you were of our deliverance,
When we are silent of the mighty debt
This kingdom owes your courage.

LYS. This declaration of your favouring me will plead
My pardon, if I do omit the ceremonial circumstance,
Which usually makes way for this great truth
I now must utter. Madam, I do love
Your virtues with that adoration,
That the all-seeing sun does not behold
A lady that I love with equal ardour.
Our friends, who have most power over us, both
Do second my desires of joining us
In the sacred tie of marriage.

HER. My lord, I thought at first how ill my words
Became a virgin ; but give 'em the right sense :

They were design'd, which was to speak you truly,

Not with a flatt'ring ambition

They might engage you to the love of one

So far unequal. If I have ever gain'd

Anything on your goodness, I'll not lose it

By foolishly aspiring to that height

You must in honour dispossess me of,

When I was seated. Marry you, my lord :

The king, our neighbour princes, all good men

Must curse me as a stain to those great virtues

You're the single lord of. If you speak this to try

What easy conquest you can make of all

You faintly but pretend to, I'll confess

The weakness of our sex would be prouder

Only to have the shows of your affection,

Than real loves of any they can hope

With justice to attain to.

LYS. Whatever I deserve,

The gods have largely recompens'd my intent

Of doing virtuously, if it hath gain'd so much

Upon your goodness as to make a way

For my affection.

HER. My lord, I do not understand you.

LYS. Pardon me, dearest lady, if my words

Too boldly do deliver what my actions

And frequent services should first have smooth'd

The way they are to take. My happiness

So nearly is concern'd, you shall approve

Me for your servant, that I trembling haste,

To know what rigours or what joys expect me,

But ere you do begin to speak my fate,

Know whom you do condemn, or whom make happy :

One, that when misery had made so wretched,

That it ravished his desires to change,

Whose eyes were turned inward on his grief,
Pleas'd with no object but what caus'd their
tears,

Your beauty only rais'd from his dark seat
Of circling sorrows, lighting me a hope
By you I might receive all happiness,
The gods have made my heart capacious of.

HER. Good my lord, give me leave again to say,

I dare not understand you ; you are too noble
To glory in the conquest of a heart
That ever hath admir'd you ; and to think
You can so far forget your birth and virtue,
As to believe me fit to be your wife,
Were a presumption that swelling pride
Must be the father of, which never yet
My heart could be allied to. Continue, prince :
Be the example of a constant love,
And let not your Milesia's ashes shrink
With a new-piercing cold, which they will feel
I' th' instant that your heart shall be consenting

To any new affection ; and give me leave to say,
Your mind can ne'er admit a noble love,
If it hath banish'd hers your memory.

LYS. Must that be argument of cruelty,
Which should be cause of pity ? And will you
Assume the patronage of envious fortune,
By adding torments unto her affliction ?
Must I be miserable in losing you,
Because the gods thought me unworthy her ?
Did I so easily digest her death,
That I want pity, and am thought unworthy
Of all succeeding love ? Witness my loss
Of joys ; if sorrow could have kill'd me,
I had not lived to show your mercy.

HER. Protect me, virtue !

[Aside

Pardon me, my lord ! I know your griefs
 How great and just they are, and only meant
 By mentioning Milesia to confess,
 How much unworthy I am to succeed her
 In your affection which, though you bent
 As low as I durst raise myself to reach,
 'Twere now impiety for me to grasp,
 I being no more my own disposer.

LYS. Ha ! what fate hath taken you from yourself ?

HER. The Lord Ergasto's importunity ;
 Who, though at first no inclination
 Of mine made me affect his vows,
 Hath vanquish'd my determination.
 I finding nothing in myself deserving
 The constancy of his affection to me,
 Besides my father's often urging me
 To make my choice obeying¹ his commands,
 And threat'ning misery if I declin'd the least—
 Knowing his violent nature, I consented
 To a contract 'twixt me and the Lord Ergasto.

LYS. O, the prophecies of my just² fears, how true

My heart foretold you !
 Madam, it cannot be you should affect
 One that hath no desert but what you give,
 By making him a part of you. My hopes,
 Though always blasted, could not apprehend
 A fear from him. I should be happy yet,
 If any worthy love shadowed my shame
 Of being refused by you.

HER. Give not my want of power to serve your grace,
 The cruel title of refusing you.

¹ [In obedience to.]

² [Old copy, unjust.]

Your merits are so great, you may assure yourself

Of all you can desire, that's possible
To grant, whom thousands worthier than myself

Would kneel to.

By my life, if my faith were not given, I would
Here offer up myself to be dispos'd by you.

Though no ambitious pride could flatter me,
You could descend to raise me to your height.

LYS. Must this be added to my former griefs
That, in the instant you profess to pity
What I must suffer in your loss—your virtue,
For which I [most] admire you, must exclude
My hopes of ever changing your resolves?
Yet let my vows gain thus much of you,
That for a month you will not marry him;
I know your father will not force you to't,
For he, not knowing what hath pass'd between
you,

Consented to this visit.

HER. By all things holy, this I swear to do,
Though violent diseases should enclose me,
Till the priest join'd our hands; yet, if you
please,

Let not my father know but he's the cause,
I dare not look upon the mighty blessing
Your love doth promise.

LYS. May I not know the reason?

HER. That he may know that his unquestion'd power

Hath forc'd me to that error which himself
And I must ever mourn unpitied.¹

LYS. Now you throw oil upon the wound you make:

¹ [Dodsley printed unquitted.]

I may be ignorant of all things else,
 But of my want of merit to deserve
 I am most perfect in : be happy, lady,
 He that enjoys you shall not need that prayer—
 My father's business calls me.

HER. Let me entreat you, that you'll see a lady, Whose virtue does deserve the honour of Your knowledge.

LYS. What is she ?

HER. An Egyptian lady, lately come to Cirrha.

LYS. I have heard of her ; they say she knows
 Our actions pass'd and future.

HER. When you her know, you will believe,
 That virtue chose that dark inhabitation,
 To hide her treasure from the envious world,
 I'll call her to your grace. [Acanthe !]

Enter ACANTHE.

HER. Madam, this is the prince. [He salutes her.]

MOOR. You need not tell me it, though this be the first

Time that I saw him since I came to Cirrha,
 His fame doth make him known to all that are Remotest from him.

LYS. My miseries indeed
 Have made it great ; for all things else I should Be more beholden unto silence than
 The voice of my most partial friends.
 Why do you gaze upon me so ?

MOOR. Have you
 Not lately lost a lady that did love you dearly ?

LYS. If you do measure time by what I suffer,
 My undiminish'd grief tells me but now—
 But now I lost her ; if the sad minutes
 That have oppress'd me since the fatal stroke,
 It is an age of torments I have felt.

MOOR. Good sir, withdraw a little, I shall deliver
 What you believe none knows besides yourself.

LYS. Most true it is! What god, that heard our vows,

Hath told it you? But if your eyes
 Pierce farther in their secrets than our Weak fancies can give credit to, tell me,
 If, where she is, she can discern and know
 My actions?

MOOR. Most perfectly she does,
 And mourns your loss of faith, that now begin,
 After so many vows, so many oaths, you would
 Be only hers, to think of a new choice.

LYS. This may be [a] conspiracy; I'll try
 It further. [Aside.]

MOOR. Had you been snatch'd from her,
 And for her sake murder'd, as she for you;
 Your urn's cold ashes should have hid her fire
 Of faithful love. Pardon me, my lord, her injur'd spirit inspires me
 With this boldness.

LYS. I am certain
 This is no inspiration of the gods;
 It cannot be she should consent my faith
 Should be the ruin of my name and memory:
 Which necessarily must follow, if virtuous love
 Did not continue it to future ages.

MOOR. Fame of a constant lover will eternise
 it
 More than a numerous issue; would you hear
 Herself express her sorrow?

LYS. If I should desire it, it were impossible.

MOOR. You conclude too fast: if this night you'll come
 Unto her tomb, you there shall see her.

LYS. Though she bring thunder in her hand, I will not fail to come,
 And though I cannot credit that your power can procure it,
 My hopes it should be so will overcome
 My reason. Ladies, I am your servant.

[Exit.]

MOOR. Madam, I cannot stay to know particulars

Of what hath pass'd betwixt you and the prince :
 Only tell me how he relish'd your saying you
 Were promis'd to Ergasto ?

HER. Respects to one

I seem'd to have made choice of made him
 Forbear his character : but shall not I
 Be punish'd, seeming to prefer one so unworthy
 Both to Eugenio and this noble prince ?

MOOR. The gods give us permission to be false

When they exclude us from all other ways
 Which may preserve our faith.

Longer I dare not stay. I am your servant.

[Exeunt severally.]

Enter ERGASTO, CLEON, PHORMIO.

ERG. Now we are met, what shall we do to keep us together ?

PHOR. Let's take some argument may last an hour of mirth.

CLE. If you'll have Ergasto be of the parley, it must be of the ladies ; for he is desperately in
 love.

PHOR. If the disease grow old in him, I'll pay the physician ; but be it so, and let it be lawful to change as often as we will.

ERG. What, the ladies ?

PHOR. The discourse of them and themselves too, if we could arrive to it. But what is she you love ?

ERG. One that I would sacrifice half my life to have but a week's enjoying of.

PHOR. At these games of love we set all ; but the best is, we cannot stake, and there's no loss of credit in the breaking. Cleon, hast thou seen him with his mistress ?

CLE. Yes, and he stands gazing on her, as if he were begging of an alms.

PHOR. 'Tis not ill-done ; but does he not speak to her ?

CLE. Never but in hyperboles ; tells her, her eyes are stars, which astronomers should only study to know our fate by.

PHOR. 'Tis not amiss if she have neither of the extremes.

CLE. What do you intend ?

PHOR. I mean, neither so ill-favoured as to have no ground for what we say, for there belief will hardly enter ; nor so handsome as to have it often spoke to her. For your indifferent beauties are those whom flattery surpriseth, there being so natural a love and opinion of ourselves, that we are adapted to believe that men are rather deceived in us, than abuse us.

ERG. Your limitation takes away much of my answer : but grant all that you say, I have no hope of obtaining my mistress.

PHOR. Then thou hast yet a year of happiness : but why, I prythee ?

ERG. She is so deserving, she thinks none worthy of her affections, and so can love none.

PHOR. You have more cause to doubt that she will never affect you, than that already she is not in love : what, a young handsome lady, that carries the flame of her heart in her cheeks, not have yet seen any one to desire? 'Tis impossible.

ERG. I was of your mind, till I had experience of the contrary.

PHOR. Conceit¹ of yourself makes you of the opinion I mentioned. You think 'tis impossible for all men, what you cannot attain to; what arts have you used to gain her?

CLE. He knows none but distilling sighs at the altar of her beauty.

PHOR. If he be subject to that frenzy, I will counsel him to take any trade upon him rather than that of love.

ERG. And do you think there is anything fitter to call down affection than submission?

PHOR. Nothing more opposite; for languishing transports, whinings and melancholy make us more laughed at than beloved of our mistresses—and with reason: for why should we hope to deserve their favours, when we confess we merit not a lawful esteem of ourselves?

CLE. I have known some their mistresses have forsaken, only because they were certain the world took notice they were deeply in love with them.

PHOR. And they did wisely; for, the victory being got, they were to prepare for a new triumph, and not, like your city officers, ride still with the same liveries. Some (I confess) have miscarried in it, but 'twas because their provision of beauty was spent before they came to composition.

ERG. Thou wert an excellent fool in a chamber; if you continue, you'll be so in a comedy. Dost believe thou can'st swagger them out of their loves?

PHOR. Sooner than soften their hearts by my tears; and though a river should run through me,

¹ [Old copy, conceites.]

I would seal up my eyes, before a drop should come that way : for our unmanly submissions raise them to that height, that they think we are largely favoured if they hearken to us with contempt.

ERG. 'Tis safer they should do so, than hate us for our insolence.

PHOR. If thou hadst ever been used to talk sense, I should wonder at thee now ; why, I should sooner hope to gain a lady after the murder of her family, than after she had an opinion I deserved to be slighted by her.

CLE. 'Fore Venus, he talks with authority. I know not well what he has said ; but methinks there is something in it : prythee, let's hearken to him.

PHOR. Do ; and if I do not dispossess you of all your opinions, let me be——

ERG. You must deal by enchantment then ; for I am resolved to stick to my conclusions.

PHOR. 'Tis the best holdfast your foolish devil has ; but strong reasons shall be your exorcism. Tell me first, what is she you love ?

ERG. Would I could.

PHOR. Then, for all thy jesting, there's some hope thou art yet in thy wits.

ERG. You mistake me ; I mean I could not tell, because no tongue can speak her to her merit.

PHOR. Heyday ! if the ballad of the rose and honeycomb do not do it more than she deserves, or almost any woman, let me be condemned to sing the funerals of parrots.

CLE. Would the ladies heard you !

PHOR. They would believe me, though they would be sorry your honours should. But what, this love—has it transformed us all ? Cleon, you can tell who 'tis he thus admires ?

CLE. Yes, and will ; 'tis Hermione, Pindarus his heir.

PHOR. What, Epictetus in a petticoat! She that disputes love into nothing — or, what's worse, a friendship with a woman?

CLE. The same; and I know you'll confess she's deserving.

PHOR. Yes; but the mischief is, she'll ne'er think so of him. If polygamy were in fashion, I would persuade him to marry her, to be governess to the rest; but not till then. Wouldst thou be content to lie with a statue, that will never confess more of love than suffering the effects of thine?

CLE. And have his liberties in the discourse of her friends, that her retiredness may be more magnified.

PHOR. Believe me, Ergasto, these severe beauties, that are to be looked on with the eyes of respect, are not for us: we must have them, that love to be praised more for fair ladies than judicious.

ERG. You mistake me, gentlemen; I choose for myself, not for you.

PHOR. Faith, for that, whoever marries, must sacrifice to fortune; and she, whose wisdom makes her snow to you may be fire to another. Some odd wrinkled fellow, that conquers her with wit, may throw her on her back with reason. Take this from the oracle, that for the general calamity of husbands all women are reputed vicious, and for the quiet of particulars every one thinks his wife the phoenix.

ERG. You have met with rare fortunes.

PHOR. Calumny is so general, that truth has lost her credit. But to th' purpose—what rivals? what hopes?

CLE. A potent rival takes away all: Lysicles does woo her.

PHOR. Good night. I will dispute it no more, whether thou shouldst have her or no; for I now conclude it is impossible.

ERG. I had her father's firm consent before he declared himself.

PHOR. Though thou hadst hers too, be wise, and despair betimes. In this point women are commonwealths, and are obliged to their faiths no farther than the safety and honour of the state is concerned. If thou wert the first example, I would excuse thee for being the first cosened. But stay, who's here?

Enter PHILLIDA veiled, beckons to ERGASTO.

O' my conscience, an embassage from some of your kind mistresses, that would fain take their leaves, before you go to captivity.

ERG. Is't possible?

PHIL. She desires you to see her, and believe that ambition cannot gain more upon her than your affection.

ERG. Take this ring, and this.

PHIL. I dare not, sir.

ERG. I'll pay thy dowry then within this half-hour: I'll wait on her. [Exit PHILLIDA.]

CLE. From what part of the town came this fair day in a cloud, that makes you look so cheerfully?

ERG. Alas, gentlemen! I was born to know nothing of love but sighs and despairs. I can be servant to none that can have the election of two.

CLE. Unriddle, unriddle.

ERG. 'Twas the servant of Hermione that came to have me wait upon her lady.

CLE. Phormio, what do you think of this?

PHOR. I won't think at all, for fear I judge amiss. The mazes of a woman are so intricate, no precept can secure us. Yet this I'm resolved on: she will not love you.

CLE. Why sent she for him, then?

PHOR. The devil that advis'd her, can tell you :
 they
 Will not lose a servant whilst he lives,
 Though they command him to be murder'd. 'Tis the
 Woman-art—if they perceive a lover to desist
 Through fear, distrust, or harsher usage, they Open him the heaven of their beauty in smiles
 And yielding looks, and with their eyes do melt
 The ice of doubts their fears contracted : perhaps Prince Lysicles spurs coldly whilst he rides
 Alone, and you must strain to make him go
 The faster. Eugenio, too, was servant to your Mistress, and Lysicles and he parted good friends.
 Should I think all the ways they have to cosen
 Us, 'twere endless. But I'll along with you,
 And guess at more. [Exeunt.

ACT III., SCENE 1.

Enter HERMIONE, IRENE ; PINDARUS following.

PIN. Tell my Lord Lysicles
 I will attend him in the walks. Where's this Ungrateful child whom the just gods have curs'd
 So much, they will not let her take the blessings they
 Do offer ?

HER. Here, sir, on
 Her knees, begging your pardon or your pity.

PIN. Canst thou hope either from my injur'd patience,
 Vex'd by thy folly into rage and madness ?
 What colour now to cover disobedience ?
 Is Lysicles unworthy ? or your knowledge,
 Does it pierce farther than the eyes of all

Into Eugenio's virtues? I tremble,
 When I think thou may'st have cause
 To know him to thy shame. Do not confess it!
 By the just gods, if I do come to know it,
 I'll sacrifice thee on thy mother's tomb.

HER. What secret sin calls down this punishment?

That I should be accused of a fault
 I dare not hear the sound of. Add not, sir,
 Suspicions of new crimes unto your rage;
 The faults I have committed are enough to arm
 Your justice. Bring me to the tomb,
 And kill me there; my mother's ghost will smile
 To see my blood shed to preserve my faith.

PIN. Your faith!

HER. Yes, sir.

Nor is my disobedience so swoll'n
 As you esteem it by your passion:
 I now obey your general commands,
 Of doing virtuously in loving him
 You did applaud whilst my poor brother liv'd.

PIN. But you are not the same; 'twas never meant

He should enjoy you if your brother died.

HER. I was not made acquainted with so much;
 But, strengthen'd by your approbation,
 Gave up my will to his, and vows to heaven,
 To know no other man for husband.

PIN. Nor I no child, if you continue thus:
 Nor will I argue more to make you doubt,
 I am not resolute in my intents:
 Alive or dead, I'll give thee to the hands Of Lycicles.

[Exit PINDARUS.]

HER. Good gods! if you are mov'd with tears,

Grant this a trial only of the weak proportion
 Of virtue you have lent me, not the overthrow.

IRE. How is it, dearest cousin?

HER. As with a martyr, almost as much pleased with
Knowledge [of] what I dare to suffer for Eugenio,
As griev'd with my affliction. Fortune in her Malice has given me yet a field to exercise
My faith and love to him I do adore.

IRE. Whilst you believe you have such cause to grieve,
All comforts seem importunate; but yet Prince Lysicles—

HER. But what! Forbear; I fear thy thoughts
Are poison, which thou wouldest fain infuse
To wound my constancy.

IRE. Sure, there is magic in that mystic name;
It could not else divide us from our reason:
What law, what faith, can bind us to remove
Love of ourselves and reverence to our parents?
You must forgive this; your Eugenio,
If he were here, must speak as I do now,
Granting his love be great as his profession,
For that must have reflection on your peace,
Not bargaining for his own happiness
With the price of the entire destruction
Of yours. What is't you fear? Report?
It will reproach your being obstinate.
Or breach of faith d'you fear?
The gods for you have made it not a fault,
Proposing such an object as Prince Lysicles.

HER. Who ever had a misery like mine?
All that are griev'd have yet the liberty
And ease of their complaints, or pitying friends;
I am excluded both; for my misfortune
Is mask'd with happiness, and if I grieve,
Such comforts as we give to those complain
Of being too rich, have I—smiles of contempt.

IRE. If it be thus, retire into your reason,
And for a time forget your passion.
D'you think that all the names of virtue shrink

Into the sound of constancy ? Must this Make you forget the debt that you do owe Unto your father, friends, and to yourself ;
 Their house's honour and your happiness ?
 Is Lysicles less worthy than his rival ?

HER. No more : their virtues, that exceed all other men's,

In them are equal.

IRE. But yet their fortune is not ?

HER. It is confess'd. Nor ever any man
 Had juster claim than he against her ;
 Rich in all virtues, that make men desir'd,
 Her narrow hand excludes him, unwonted to bestow

Her treasure there, where an excess of merit
 Would make her gifts but seem the pay of virtue,
 Not favours of her partial love.

Enter ACANTHE the Moor.

O, you are welcome ! Here behold a rock,
 That stands the shake of the impetuous winds
 And the swoll'n seas.

MOOR. Have there been any new storms since I went ?

HER. O yes ; and more endangering songs of Sirens !

A flourishing land propos'd, on which I might Have shipwreck'd with delight.

MOOR. I think I understand you.

HER. You must needs :

It was Prince Lysicles, presented in his lustre,
 'Gainst whom I arm'd the virtues of my friend
 And my own faith, irresolute to whom
 The victory should yield. At last I left
 My heart, the prize to both divided.

MOOR. To both divided !

HER. Yes, the prince hath the adoration of my heart,
Eugenio the love.

MOOR. What fires, what seas, must your Eugenio pass,
To make him worthy you? Methinks I feel
His soul sigh for a trial of his faith.

HER. We both have had satiety of that :
But can you bring no comfort? Have the gods
Shut up their oracles as well as mercy?
Though they will give no ease, they might advise.
That we may put off misery by death.

MOOR. They seldom let us know what is to come.
That we may still implore their aid to help us :
Yet something I can tell ; if hope or force
Shall make you deviate from your resolve,
You are the subject of their hate : or if
You measure your or their affection
By merit or advantages of fortune,
You are the mark of all disasters.

HER. I have complained unjustly of the gods :
They favour me so much, they do applaud
My resolution for Eugenio.
Merit in others ! I will close my eyes
From the bless'd sun, before they shall take in An object that may startle my firm faith.

MOOR. Be constant, and be happy ; when you meet .
With opposition that may shake your judgment,
Remember what affliction 'tis to weep
A fault irreparable ; and think not Reason can pacify your father's rage ;
You must oppose your passion unto his,
And love will be victorious, being the noblest.
To-morrow I will bring more certain counsel. [Exit.]

HER. Where cannot virtue dwell ? What a still shade
Hath she found out to live securely in,

From the attempts of men ? Come, my Irene,
 Though thou hast spoken treason 'gainst my love,
 Because¹ thine did produce it, I must thank thee.
 Let's in, and fortify ourselves with some sad tale
 Of those whose perjur'd loves have made them live
 Hated, and die most miserable. [Exit HERMIONE.]

Enter PHILLIDA.

PHIL. If I should weep, as my lady does, for all the servants I have lost !

IRE. Thou wouldst weep in thy grave, Phillida ; yet the worst is, thou wilt lose more within this seven years than thou hast got in ten ; for men are changeable, sweet Phillida.

PHIL. And our faces were not, 'twere no matter.
 They should make haste, or we should overtake them, or prevent them. A commodity of beauty, that would last forty years, would bear a good price, madam.

IRE. By Venus, would it, Phillida ! as high as that of honour.

PHIL. But is not my lady a strange woman to weep thus for one servant, when she has another in his place ? For my part, I could never find such differences in men—to be sad when I had any.

IRE. And thy word may be taken as soon as any wench's in Greece, or there be slanderers in the world. But she affects constancy.

PHIL. Some ill-favoured woman, that meant to preserve her last purchase, which her want of beauty forfeited, invented that name.

IRE. Thou'rt in the right, Phillida ; this incon-stancy is a monster without teeth, for it devours

¹ [So for the metre ; the old copy and Dodsley, 'cause.]

none, makes no son wear happy mourning, nor mother childless : and, for my part, I am of opinion that the gods give a blessing to it ; for none live happier than those that have greatest abundance of it.

PHIL. What is got by this whining constancy, but the loss of that beauty for one servant, which would procure us the vows, [the] sacrifice, and service of a thousand ?

IRE. Enough of this ; wert thou with Ergasto ?

PHIL. Yes, and told him that my lady sent for him : but to what intent did you make me lie ?

IRE. Thou art so good-natured, that thou wilt pardon such a trifle for one reason ; but I have two : the first is, I would fain speak with him ; the other, knowing my cousin to be in an ill humour, if he press to see her, I hope she will give him such an answer, that he shall never dare to speak to her more.

PHIL. These men have less reason than mice : they would know else how to shift places, and shelter themselves from a storm. If I were a man, and lost the happiness of seeing my mistress two days, I should lose the desire the third. [Aside.] Do you sigh, madam ? You are in love too.

IRE. As far as goes to sighing, but no dying, for their breeches.

PHIL. I'll be your compurgator for the handle of a fan ; I know love has brought many into the world, but let out none. Has he pierced you, ha ?

IRE. O no, my skin was always proof against his dart ; but he once found me laughing, and so thrust it down to my heart.

PHIL. Look to it, though 'tis but a little weapon, yet I have known it make greater swellings than the sting of a bee. Do you long for a man ?

IRE. Yes, a husbandman, and let the gods after take care for my children.

PHIL. You'll find enou' to do it: is the Moor still with my lady?

IRE. I left her with her.

PHIL. 'Tis a shame such people should be suffered near the Court.

IRE. Why, prythee?

PHIL. As 'tis, there be so many inquisitive rascals, that we have much ado to keep matters secret; but if in despite of our care they be divulged, we shall be defamed on the Exchanges.

IRE. Thou hast reason, but she is secret as the night she resembles.

PHIL. Is she? I would fain ask her one question: but 'tis no matter: 'tis but taking physic at the worst.

IRE. If thou talk'st a little longer, I shall guess as much as she knows. But who's here?

[ERGASTO, PHORMIO, CLEON, talking at the door.

PHOR. Ne'er fright me with the lightning of her eyes; on me she may open or shut her eyes as she please, but my happiness is not at her disposing.

CLE. If thou provest a lover, my next song is begun.

PHOR. I will not deny but I may love her, if she please. But if she be not pleased with my love, if it continue two hours, I'll give her leave to tie me to her monkey.

CLE. Look, Ergasto has found two of the ladies, and has set his face to begin to them.

PHOR. In verse or prose?

CLE. We shall hear, if we draw nearer. A good evening, ladies!

IRE. We thank you, my lords; but if we were superstitious, your company were no good omen.

PHOR. Why, I beseech you?

IRE. Nay, I am no expositor; you come, my lord, to see my cousin Hermione.

ERG. I do, madam, and should be proud to hear I live in her memory.

IRE. Can you doubt it? I'll assure you you do; she's never troubled with anything, but you presently are called into the comparison with it; her teeth cannot ache, but she swears it is almost as great a vexation as your love: if any die, out of her pity to save the tears of a few mourners, she wishes it were you.

ERG. If I heard her desire it, she should quickly have her wish.

IRE. She would be glad on't, o' my conscience, though the scruple of having you do anything for her sake would trouble her a little; yet I can teach you to make advantage of all this.

PHOR. What advantage, my delicate sweet lady?

IRE. A very great one; for, first, I believe he desires nothing more than to be assured she esteems him for her servant.

PHOR. Right; but does this usage show it?

IRE. Most evidently; for, being thus severe to none else, 'tis manifest she confesseth a power over him, and pays his services with this coin of scorn and contempt, and having her stamp upon't, he is bound to accept it.

CLE. What think you of this, Phormio?

PHOR. A most excellent girl! would she were poor.

CLE. Why poor?

PHOR. She would live rarely by her——

CLE. What?

PHOR. Wit! I would be a good customer.

IRE. 'Twould please you to hear with what arguments she justifies this cruelty, and swears it is not revenge enough for spoiling her good nature.

ERG. I spoil her good nature?

PHOR. Nay, let her go on; I'll hearken an age.

IRE. Yes, you, by suffering her undeserved scorn, have bred such a delight and habit of it in her, that she can hardly forbear it when she strives to be complaisant to her best friends; and, to say truth, we are all endangered by such as you, when we see that frowns procure us knees, and kind usage scarce gets us two good-morrows.

PHOR. If ever there were a Sybil at sixteen, this lady is one. By this day, you have a high place in my heart.

IRE. In your heart!

PHOR. Nay, despise it not, you'll find good company there.

IRE. But I love to be alone.

PHOR. And I would fain meet you when you are so. Will you give me leave to speak with your scholar? [HERMIONE and ACANTHE above.

IRE. If you be his friend, teach him to be wise.

PHOR. For your sake, I will do all I can. Ergasto, wilt thou be happy? Marry this lady! Wilt thou be revenged on thy proud mistress? Marry her! Wilt thou be sure to father wise children? Do as I bid thee.

ERG. I will deal truly with thee: she has taken my heart out of Hermione's keeping.

PHOR. Be thankful, and bestow it upon her in recompense; she will accept it, doubt not; she has taken such pains to redeem it. Look how she casts her eyes upon thee! She's thine own for ever, and has been long.

ERG. I am desperately in love.

PHOR. Marry, and get out of it; there may be some little straining at the first offer of the present; but if she send not for it before you get home, I'll ne'er trust my eyes more.

[PHILLIDA steals away, CLEON follows.

ERG. I'll attempt it, let what will follow.

PHOR. Be confident, and prosper.

ERG. Madam, what would you expect from him you had redeemed from captivity?

IRE. The disposing of his liberty.

ERG. 'Tis just; but this may be no great favour to the slave, if his misery be only altered, not lessened.

PHOR. You are little curious! Why do you not ask who this concerns? Well, I'll tell you; you have redeemed Ergasto, and he kneels to know your commands.

[Whilst he kneels, HERMIONE and the MOOR look down from the window.]

MOOR. You may believe her, madam, she loves him; now you may revenge her, persuading you to leave Eugenio, by smiling on Ergasto; 'twill advance your cousin's ends too, if you do as I'll advise you, whilst we descend.

IRE. 'Tis festival to-day, my lords, and so I admit this mirth. But to-morrow, I will tell you, I am no more inclined to love than my cousin Hermione.

ERG. But you can suffer yourself to be beloved?

IRE. I think I can.

PHOR. He'll ask no more, but leave the rest to his respects and services.

IRE. But you consider not whom you may offend in this mirth.

ERG. I'll ne'er consider whom I offend in loving you: I wish her beauty centupled, that my first obligation to you might be leaving her. By this fair hand, I'll never name any but you for mistress.

IRE. I may believe you when time and your actions shall tell it me as well as your words.

PHOR. You wrong your beauty to expect an assurance from time. Ordinary faces require it to perfect the impressions they make; yours strikes like lightning in an instant. If he did not adore you till now, you must attribute it to some fascination ; but, his judgment cleared, he will be forced to continue the adoration he has begun.

Enter HERMIONE, MOOR, PHILLIDA, CLEON : they find ERGASTO kneeling.

PHOR. Who's that ?

ERG. The Moor you heard of.

PHOR. I have a strange capricio of love entered me : I must court that shade.

HER. How now, my lord ! Courting another mistress ! I see I must lock up my winds, or you will seek the nearest harbour.

ERG. Excluded by your rigour, madam, I was entreating your fair cousin to present my vows.

HER. Was it no more ?

ERG. No more ! you cannot doubt it, madam. Turn in your eyes upon your beauties and perfections, and they will tell you how impossible it is to lose the empire they have gained upon our hearts and wills. Fortune and want of merit may make me lose the hope of your fair graces, but never so much traitor as to pay homage to any other beauty, or change the resolution I have fixed to be your servant only.

HER. I thank you, sir ; my sex will be my pardon if I return not equal thanks. We think, if any manumit, before we license them to part, they do usurp a power is ours by nature. The posture I found you in was more than ordinary courtship gives.

ERG. You might condemn it, had not you been the cause on't. I ne'er think of your name but with a reverence great as I pay the gods ; and they allow us bending to their images when we transfer our vows. The fair Irene is worthy all have not the hope of you ; but whilst you give me leave to cherish that ambition, I must not own so great an injury as to admit the proffered love of those who are so distant from your merit.

HER. 'Twas unkindly done to undermine me.

ERG. In her presence I will confirm this to you.

HER. You shall oblige me, since she has wronged me ; Irene, hark you.

[They talk in private. After a long whisper, the MOOR strives to go from PHORMIO ; he holds her.]

PHOR. In the name of darkness, d'y'e think I am not in earnest, that you coy it thus ?

MOOR. Forbear, uncivil lord. [She goes from him.]

CLE. Dost thou not see that all the fire is out of the coal ? If thou wouldst have it burn, lay thy lips to the spark that's left, and blow it into flame.

PHOR. What wouldst thou have me do ?

CLE. Kiss her.

PHOR. Not for five hundred crowns.

CLE. Wouldst lie with her, and not kiss her ?

PHOR. Yes, and can give reasons for't, besides experience ; and when this act is known—this resolute encounter, rich widows of threescore will not doubt my prowess.

[HERMIONE, IRENE, ERGASTO, break off their private talk.]

IRE. As I livè, he swore all this to me.

HER. Hide thee, inconstant man, thou art so false

Thy oaths do serve thee for no other use
But to condemn thee, not to get belief :
Be gone, and leave to love till thou hast found
The way to truth, and let not vanity cozen you
To believe that I am mov'd, because you change :
A thousand other imperfections
Have made me hate thee ; yet I chose this way

To let thee know't that, deprehended with the Black mark upon thee, thou may'st not dare
To trouble me again.

ERG. Madam!

HER. There may be some that for their secret sins

The gods will punish, making them love you :
Choose amongst them. Irene, I will hope, though she

Be credulous, will learn by this how far 'tis safe to trust you.

MOOR. This was well manag'd.

PHOR. What mountain have you pierc'd,
That hath sent forth this wind, since I left you ?

ERG. I have undone myself for ever.

PHOR. As how ?

ERG. I told Hermione I never lov'd Irene.

CLE. Did she hear it ?

ERG. O yes ! it might have been forsworn else.

CLE. The devil thou hast !

ERG. Ask him ; he made me do't.

CLE. What course will you take to redeem your fault ?

ERG. A precipice, as being ashamed to live any longer.

PHOR. A halter you shall as soon ! Come, come,
I'll intercede, and be your surety. Look, she stays to pardon you ; down on your knees.

[She goes away ; PHORMIO pulls her back ; ER-GASTO kneels, holds up his hands, his cloak over his face.]

PHOR. O my sweet lady ! be merciful, like the gods you resemble. They have as often pardon in their hands as thunder ; and the truth is, if they will not forgive this fault of inconstancy, they must live alone, or at least without men. This was the last gasp of his dying friendship to her ; and now he is entirely yours.

IRE. He has not wronged me.

PHOR. Fie ! say not so ; that's as great an injury as not pardoning him : he has, and shall come naked to receive his punishment. See, he dares not look for comfort ; let him take it in at his ears.

IRE. Pray content yourself with the time you have made me lose, and let me go.

PHOR. Never, till you pardon him.

IRE. I will do anything for my release ; if he has offended me, let him learn hereafter to speak truer than he swears ; and in time he may get credit.

PHOR. 'Tis enough.

ERG. Is she gone ?

PHOR. Yes.

ERG. How did she look ?

PHOR. Faith, ashamed ; she loved you so well, and sorry she had no reason to love you better.

ERG. 'Tis an excellent lady.

PHOR. If I could make jointures, I would not take this pains for your honour. Cleon, whither slip you ?

CLE. After Phillida.

PHOR. And what success ?

CLE. Pox on't ! these waiting-women will not deal, unless they have earnest in their hands, and I was unprovided.

PHOR. Away, unthrift !¹

[Exeunt.]

[ACT IV., SCENE 1.]

Enter LYSICLES.

LYS. This is the hour powerful Acanthe promis'd I should once more behold my lost Milesia.

¹ [The third act is not divided into scenes in the old copy, nor are the first and second ; and it is difficult to fix the point where the second scene should open.]

Pardon me, Reason, that my wither'd hopes Rebel against thy force ; a happiness
 So mighty is oppos'd unto thy doubts,
 That I'll divest myself for ever of thee,
 Rather than not believe impossibles,
 That bring such comforts to my languish'd soul.
 Hail, holy treasurer of all the wealth
 Nature e'er lent the world ! be still the envy
 Of the proud monuments that do enclose
 The glorious titles of great conquerors.
 Let no profane air pierce thee but my sighs ;

[MILEZIA riseth like a ghost.

Let them have entrance, whilst my tears do warm
 Thy colder marble. Ha ! what miracle !
 Are the gods pleas'd to work to ease affliction ?
 The phoenix is created from her ashes,
 Pure as the flames that made 'em : still the same,
 The same Milesia ! Heaven does confess in this,
 That she can only add unto thy beauty
 By making it immortal.
 Let it be lawful for thy Lysicles
 To touch thy sacred hand, and with it guide
 My wandering soul unto that part of heaven
 Thy beauty does enlighten.

GHOST. Forbear, and hear me. If you approach,
 I vanish—

Impious, inconstant Lysicles ! Cannot
 This miracle of my reassuming
 A mortal shape persuade thee there are gods
 To punish falsehood, that thou still persistest
 In thy dissembling ? Do not I know
 Thy heart is swell'd with vows thou hast laid up
 For thy Hermione ? whom thou wouldst persuade Thy narrow heart is capable of love,
 By mocking of my ashes, and erecting tombs
 To me, which are indeed but trophies of thy dead
 Conquer'd love and virtue.

LYS. No more, bless'd shape !

I shall not think that thou descendst from heaven,
 If thou continuest thus in doubt of me ;
 Nor can there be a hell where such forms are.
 The knowledge how thou com'st here doth disturb
 me ;

Yet such a reverence I do owe thy image,
 That I will lay before thee all my thoughts,
 Spotless as truth. Then thou shalt tell the shades,
 How fortune, though it made my love unhappy,
 Could not diminish it, nor press it one degree
 From the proud height it was arrived to.
 How I did nightly pray to this sad tomb,
 Bringing and taking fire of constant love
 From the cold ashes. How, when encompass'd
 With thousand horrors, death had been a rest
 [from],

I did prefer a loath'd life, to revenge myself
 And her upon the murderer.

GHOST. I shall desire to live if this be true ;
 Nothing can add a comfort where I am,
 But the assurance of your love. I know Faith is not tied to pass the confines
 Of this life ; yet Hermione's happiness
 Does trouble me. You'll think I lov'd
 You living, when (dead) I am jealous of you.

Lys. Miesia, bless'd saint, now I am sure thou art

What thou resemblest, and dost know my secret'st thought.

But as the gods, of which thou art a part,
 Are not content with our hearts' sacrifice,
 Unless our words confess it ; hear me then :
 If my thoughts e'er consented to replant
 My love, may your dire thunder light
 Upon my head, and sink it down so low,
 I may not see thy glories. I confess
 My words have sacrific'd to deities
 I ne'er ador'd. Those strains of love

My tears and friendship to the best of men,
 I hope have cancell'd. For my Eugenio
 I did pretend a love unto Hermione,
 Who else had sold herself unto the rage
 Of her offended father. Had you liv'd,
 You would have pardon'd, when infidelity,
 But personated, did preserve a faith
 So holy as theirs was; this is my fault.

GHOST. My glory and my happiness!

LYS. Yet this, as oft I wept as I was forc'd
 (For his dear cause) to injure sacred love;
 Yet durst not but decline his severe laws,
 When my friend's life excus'd the pious error.

GHOST. Did you suspect her, that you conceal'd this from her?

LYS. There is but one Milesia; besides,
 If true, I meant her fears should aid
 My false disguise, which her quick-sighted father
 Would else have pierc'd, who hates Eugenio,
 And loves no virtue but what shines through wealth.

GHOST. My best, best Lysicles, I am again in
 love,

Thy holy flame doth lend me light to see
 My closed fires. Why did not fate give me
 So large a field to exercise my faith?
 I envy thee this trial, and would be
 Expos'd to dangers, that have yet no name,
 That I might meet thy love with equal merit.

LYS. The cause takes all away, and want of power
 Excuseth what I cannot yet express.

But how our loves came to so sad a period,
 As yet in clouds I have only seen [shown.]

GHOST. My uncle's cruelty and hate of you pro-cur'd our separation.

LYS. But how knew he our loves? Though torment since
 Have wrung it from me, my joys ever flow'd silent
 And calm.

GHOST. I know it; but we were betray'd
By one that serv'd me, and the doubt's confirm'd
By the Moor you spake with yesterday.

LYS. Ha! how came she to know it? She was not here!

GHOST. All that I ever did she's conscious of;
And jealous of your love unto Hermione,
Did place me here, to search into your thoughts;
And now is prouder of this discovery,
Than if a crown were added to her [brows].

LYS. To what strange laws does heaven confine itself,

That it will suffer them that dare be damn'd
To have power over those it has selected?
My tears and sacrifice could never gain
So much upon its mercy, as to lend
Thy happy sight for one faint minute's comfort;
Yet those that sell themselves to hell, can force
Thy quiet rest for inquisition
On innocence. And to what purpose serves
Faith and religious secrecy,
When magic mocks and frustrates all our vows?
This Moor then was confederate with your uncle's passion?

GHOST. She is the cause that I do walk in shades.

LYS. And I will be that she shall walk in hell.
With her I will begin, then seek revenge
Under the ruins of thy uncle's house.
All men that dare to name him, and not curse
His memory, shall feel the power
Of my despised hate and friendship.

GHOST. My dearest Lysicles, promise to be
But temperate in your anger, and I will Discover more than you yet hop'd to know.

LYS. As justice, that's concern'd to punish crimes,
I will.

GHOST. Then know I was betray'd.
O love! here's company, I must retire. [Sinks.

Enter PINDARUS and SERVANTS.

PIN. Talking to graves at night, and making love i' th' day?

My lord, I nor my daughter have deserved this.

LYS. Pardon me, sir, I could do no less, being to take

An everlasting farewell, but give this

Visit to her memory. Reserve your censure

Till ten days be over, and if I do not Satisfy you, condemn me.

[Exeunt.]

Enter HERMIONE and PHILLIDA.

HER. [Here,] Philly, take thy lute, and sing the song

Was given thee last.

[Exit PHILLIDA.]

Song.

*Where did you borrow that last sigh
And that relenting groan?
For those that sigh, and not for love,
Usurp what's not their own.
Love's arrows sooner armour pierce,
Than your soft snowy skin;
Your eyes can only teach us love,
But cannot take it in.*

The song being ended, re-enter PHILLIDA.

PHIL. O madam! call all your sorrows to you, you are

Not sad enough to hear the news I bring.

HER. Would it were killing, that my death might end

My fears, as my life has my hopes.

PHIL. You mistake me, madam; Eugenio is returned.

HER. Eugenio returned ! thou hast reason, Phillida, I should be dead with sorrow : 'tis not fit we hear his name without a miracle. Where is he ? Send to bring him hither.

PHIL. He waits on your commands without.

HER. Bring him in. Good gods !
If you can suffer me one minute's joy,
Give it me now, and let excess of happiness
Finish what sorrow cannot. But where's this happiness
I fain would dream of ? Eugenio is return'd,
That I may look on him, and not be his,
And call our faiths in vain to aid our loves.

[ACT IV., SCENE 2.]

Enter EUGENIO and PHILLIDA.

EUG. May the gods give you, madam, a content
As high as you have power to bestow
On those you favour, and then your happiness
Will be as great as is your beauty.

HER. O my best lord ! you now behold a face
Too much acquainted with my sad heart's grief
Not to be stain'd with't. Sure, you cannot Know it ?—I pray, say you do not—you'll wrong
Two things I am most proud of—my just grief
And your young love—which could not grow,
Nourish'd with such poor heat as now it gives.
I have a story that will break your heart
When you have heard it, and mine, ere I
Deliver it. Prince Lysicles to-morrow marries me,
Or I must leave my duty or my life.
Forgive me, that I dare to utter this.

EUG. Madam, forbear your tears : they are a ransom
Too mighty to redeem the greatest faith

The gods were ever witness to. I know
 Whereto you tend : you would have me untie
 The knot that bound our loves, and I will do't,
 Though it be fasten'd to my strings of life.
 Be happy in your choice : give to his merit
 What once you promis'd to my perfect love,
 By which I only did pretend my claim.
 I do release you, as I know heaven has ;
 Who in his justice cannot have consented
 To a longer faith in you ; you must not be
 The conquest of a miserable man,
 O'er whom their cruel'st influences reign.

HER. Some saving power close up my drowned
 eyes,
 Which death had long since shut, had not the love
 And hope of seeing you preserv'd them open.
 Have I been false for this to all my friends ?
 That you should think I can be so to you ? Add
 not
 By your suspicions a crime to our misfortune.

EUG. Of you I can have none, but what excuse
 you :
 You had made me miserable, had not your faith
 Yielded to those assaults ; as worth and greatness
 Titles your father's rage ; and your own judgment
 Did shake and raze it. With what disturbed mind
 Should I have look'd on you my heart ador'd,
 And love made miserable ? Still you weep—
 But these are tears your fortune did lay up
 To ease your misery, had you continued mine.
 And your suns, clear'd from their last clouds,
 They will more freely shine on your Lysicles.
 For myself, my love in his last act shall recompense
 The injuries 't has done to your repose,
 By killing me ; then must injustice fly,
 And hale inconstancy along with her,
 From your fair conquer'd soul they now possess ?

HER. O my griefs !

Now I perceive the gods decreed you endless,
 Since they have made him add unto my torment,
 Whose memory before did make the sharpest glorious.

Tears and sighs and groans, farewell.

They ne'er were spent but when I fear'd for you ;
 And, you being lost, I have no use of them.

Here, take this paper : 'tis the last legacy
 My love shall ever give you : 'twas design'd
 When I conceived you worthy. If you Believe her words, whose faith was never lost, though you

Ungratefully have flung it off. If so you be not
 That you accuse me for, you there shall find
 A story that will punish your suspicion.

[He reads, and then kneels, and she turns from him.]

EUG. You that by powerful prayers have diverted
 An imminent ruin, inspire me with fit words
 To appease my injur'd mistress. Hear me :
 I do not kneel for mercy, but to beg
 Your leave to die : I must not live, when Pardons make my offence most horrible, and hell
 Is here without them ; take a middle way
 If you incline to mercy, and forget me.

HER. Rise ; this is worse than your doubts were.

EUG.¹ Turn not your face away ; would you revenge ?

Then let my eyes dwell on't. What punishment
 Can there be greater than for me to see
 The beauty I have lost by my own fault ?
 Look then upon me.

¹ [Omitted in old copy, but supplied by Dodsley, and in a coeval hand inserted in the copy now used of the original edition.]

HER. No, I must yet keep
My anger to preserve my honour, and I dare not trust
That and my eyes at once, if they behold you.

EUG. Then hear a wretched man, that has outliv'd

So much his hopes, he knows not what to wish—
Whether to live or die ; yet life for this
I only seek, that you may find I shrink not
To punish him your justice has condemn'd.

HER. Rise, I can hold out no longer ; the bare Sounds of your death dissolve my resolutions ;
Forget my anger, as I will the cause.

EUG. Never ; it shall live here to honour me,
Since pity of my love made you decline it :
But must——

HER. Yes, the virtuous Lycicles—for his respects
to me,

Howe'er unhappy, challenged that name—

In your absence labours to marry me : yet
death——

EUG. Wretched Eugenio ! did thy coward fate
Not dare to strike thee, till thou turn'dst thy back ?
Must I return from banishment to find
My hopes are banish'd ? Did I for this love virtue, Pursued her rugged paths, when danger made
Her horrid to the valiant to be ruin'd
By him that is most virtuous ? Ye gods,
Was envy, malice, fortune impotent
To injure me, but you must raise up virtue to suppress

Me ? If I suffer it, I shall deserve it.

HER. O my Eugenio ! we are miserable,
Yet must not quarrel, love, to take or give
A seeming comfort : go, try all your power
Of hate or friendship to undo this match ;
I'll give you leave to die first—anything,
But let not me have so much leave to change,
As to believe you think it possible. : [Exeunt.

[ACT IV., SCENE 3.]

Enter LYSICLES and SERVANT.

SER. The physician you sent for waits without.

LYS. Bring him in, and stay in the next room.

Enter PHYSICIAN.

You are welcome : I must employ your trust and secrecy in something that concerns me. You must procure me instantly a powerful poison.

PHY. My lord !

LYS. Nay, no ceremonies of denial. I give you my intents, not to be disputed, but obeyed. I know you walk not frequently in these rough ways ; but 'tis not want of knowledge, but your will, makes you decline them.

PHY. My lord, I have observ'd you long, and see you

Wear your life like something you would fain Put off. I will not undertake to counsel you, in That your nearest friends have oft attempted
Without success : yet, if my life should issue
With the words I now will utter, I'll boldly tell Your grace, I will not be a means to cut your Days off, to make mine happy ever.

LYS. I did expect this from you ; and to inform you

Briefly know, though I do loathe my life, I will Not part with't willingly, till it does serve
Me to revenge my wrongs : and to assure you
more,

I will not use your art against myself. Let Your composition procure the greatest torture
Poison can force, for I must use it upon one
Our laws cannot condemn ; because the circumstance

That makes him guilty, cannot be produc'd, but with Expense of time ; and my revenge will not Admit it. By my honour, this is the cause.

PHY. If I

Were sure your enemies should only try
Th' effects of what I can do in your service,
The horrid'st tortures treason ever justified,
Should not exceed the sufferings of those
Should take the poison I can bring you.

LYS. Bring it me instantly ; and if the pains of hell

Can be felt here, let your ingredients
Call them up. If his life were only
My aim and end, whilst I do wear this,
I'd not implore your aid ;
But I must set him on the rack, that there
He may confess my inquisition justice.

PHY. An hour returns me with your commands Perform'd. Yet I'll observe you farther. [Aside.

LYS. So, this is the first degree to my revenge,
Which I will prosecute, till I have made
All that were guilty of my loss of peace,
Wash their impiety in their guilty blood.
All places where I meet them shall be altars,
On which I'll sacrifice the murderers,
To appease the spirit of my injur'd mistress :
And (the last victim) I will fall myself-
Upon her sacred tomb, to expiate
The crimes I have committed in deferring
Justice thus long. This curs'd magician
Shall be the first—she did reveal our loves ;
Milesia said she did ; and if it were
Her blessed spirit, nothing but truth dwells in't.
If it were a phantom rais'd by her foul spells ;
She pays the fault of her abusing me,
Insidiating with my Milesia's form,
To search, and then betray my resolution
Of serving my best friend. How now !

Enter SERVANT.

SER. Sir, Lord Pindarus would speak with you.

LYS. Where is he ? [Exeunt.]

ACT V., SCENE 1.;

Enter SERVANT and LYSICLES.

SER. Sir, I have waited, as you commanded, near the house of the Egyptian lady : something is done that disturbs them all, divers run in and out, physicians are sent for : at last, I went in myself, and entered her chamber, found her on her bed almost distracted with torture : cries she is poisoned : curses her jealousy and curiosity, calls upon your name ; desires and then forbids you should be sent for.

LYS. But I will come to her confession. Courage, my soul,

Let no faint pity hinder thee the joys
Thou art receiving ; triumph in their sufferings
That have attempted thine. Look down, Milesia,
Applaud my piety, that snatch'd the sword
From sleeping justice to revenge thy death. [Exit.]

SER. What means my lord to be pleas'd with this Sad news ? How can this stranger have offended
him ?

I'll follow, learn the issue, and the cause.

[Aside. Exit.]

Enter the MOOR on her bed, HERMIONE, PHILLIDA, and IRENE. The bed thrust out.

MOOR. O, O, O gods ! If I have merited your hate,

You might have laid it on, until my name
 Had been a word to express full misery,
 And I had thank'd you, if you had forborne
 To make his innocence the instrument
 Of your dire wrath. Hermione, Irene,
 I have conjur'd my servants not to tell you,
 When I am dead, who I was : but if
 Their weakness shall discover't, let it be hid
 From the best Lysicles : I burn, I burn,
 And death dares not seize me, frighted
 With the furies that torment me.

HER. Mysterious powers ! Instruct us in the way

You would be serv'd, for we are ignorant ;
 Your thunder else would not be aim'd at those,
 That follow virtue, as it is prescrib'd,
 Whilst thousand others 'scape unpunished,
 That violate the laws we are taught to keep.

Enter LYSICLES.

LYS. What mean these sad expressions of sorrow ?

HER. O my lord, nature had not made our hearts

Capable of pity if we forbear it here :
 The virtuous Acanthe has been tormented ;
 With pains nothing is able to express
 But her own groans : she fears she's poison'd ;
 Talks of you, of tombs, and of Milesia,
 And in the midst of all her torture says
 Her distrust and jealousy deserve a greater punishment.

LYS. And I believe't, nor should you pity her :
 Those that do trace forbidden paths of knowledge
 The gods reserve unto themselves, do never do't,
 But with intent to ruin the believers,
 And venturers on their art. Something I know

O' th' curs'd effects of her commanding magie,
 And she (no doubt) is conscious to herself
 Of infinite more mischiefs than are yet reveal'd.
 I am confident she is fled her country
 For the ills she has done there, and now
 The punishment has overta'en her here.
 And, for her shows of virtue, they are masks
 To hide the rottenness that lies within,
 And gain her credit with some dissembled acts
 Of piety, which levels her a passage
 To those important mischiefs hell
 Has employ'd her here to execute.

MOOR. O gods! deny me not a death, since you
 Have given me the tortures that advance it:
 If I deserve this, your inflicting hands
 Do reach unto the shades, lay it on there.
 Hermione, Irene, is Lysicles yet come?

LYS. Yes, to counsel you to pacify the gods
 You have offended by your cursed arts:
 The blessed ghost you sent me to has told me
 Some sad effects on it, and in her name and cause
 Have the gods hurl'd this punishment on thy Foul soul, and made my grief, enrag'd to madness,
 The blessed instrument of thy destruction,
 Which does but here begin.

MOOR. You then did send
 The poison with the present I receiv'd?

LYS. Yes, I did;
 And wonder you durst tempt my just revenge,
 Unless you did believe you could confine
 The revelations of the best spirits
 Your cursed charms betray'd first,
 And then enforc'd to leave their happy seats,
 To perfect the designs your malice labour'd in.

MOOR. What unknown ways have the gods invented
 To punish me! I feel a torment
 No tyranny e'er parallell'd, yet must confess

An obligation to him that impos'd it.
 Good gods! If I do bow under your wills,
 Without repining at your sad decrees,
 Grant this to recompense my martyrdom,
 That he that is the author of my sufferings,
 May never learn his error. Sir, if torments
 E'er could expiate the crimes we have committed,
 Mine might challenge your pardon and your pity :
 I feel death entering me ; love the memory
 Of your Miliesia, and forgive——

IRE. Help, help! She dies!

LYS. If it be possible, call life into her for some minutes, her full confession will absolve my justice.

IRE. Bring some water here, she does but swoon.
 So, chafe her temples——O heavens! What prodigy is here! Her blackness falls away! My lord, look on this miracle; doth not heaven instruct us in pity of her wrongs, that the opinions which prejudice her virtue, should thus be washed away with the black clouds that hide her purer form?

HER. Heaven hath some further ends in this than we

Can pierce. More water: she returns to life,
 And all the blackness of her face is gone.

IRE. Pallas, Apollo, what may this portend?
 My lord, have you not seen a face like this?

LYS. Yes, and horror seizeth me. 'Tis the idea

Of my Miliesia. Impenetrable powers!
 Deliver us in thunder your intents,
 And exposition of this metamorphosis.

HER. She stirs

LYS. Hold her up gently.

[He kneels.]

MOOR. O, O! Why do you kneel to me?

LYS. Are not you Miliesia?

MOOR. Why do you ask?

LYS. O, then you are.

MOOR. My Lysicles, I am by miracle preserv'd ;
Though, since the gods repent them of their suc-
cours,

Knowing me unworthy of thy firm constant
love,

I never thought that death could be a terror,

Too long acquainted with the miseries

Pursue our lives ; but now the apprehension

My grave should swallow thee, makes me to welcome it

With a heaviness that sinks despairing sinners.

LYS. Pour down your thunder, gods, upon this
head,

And try if that can make me yet more wretched.

Was not her death affliction enough,

But you must make me be the murderer ?

Is this a punishment for adoring her

Equal with you, you made so equal to ye ?

Pardon the fault you forc'd me to commit :

So visible a divinity could not be look'd

On with less adoration.

MOOR. If e'er I did expect a happier death,

May I die loath'd ! What funeral pomp

Can there be greater than for me to hear,

Whilst I yet live, my dying obsequies

With so much zeal pronounc'd by him I love !—

Tortures again do seize me.

LYS. Eyes, are you dry, where such an object calls

[All] your tears forth ! My blood shall supply their¹ place.

MOOR. For heaven's sake, hold his hands. O
my best Lysicles,

Do not destroy the comforts of my soul ;

What a division do I feel within me !

I am but half-tormented ; my soul in spite

¹ [Old copy, your.]

O' th' tortures of my body, does feel a joy
That meets departed spirits in the blest shades.

LYS. What unexpected mischiefs circle me,
What arts hath malice, arm'd with fortune, found
To make me wretched? Could I e'er have thought
A miracle could have restor'd thee to my eyes,
That¹ they should see the joys of heaven in thee?
Yet now the height of my affliction is,
That they behold thee, guilty of the close
Of thine for ever. See, Hermione,
The countenance death should put on, when death
Would have us throng unto her palaces,
And court her frozen sepulchres.

IRE. Sure, she is dead: how pale she is!

LYS. No; she is white as lilies, as the snow
That falls upon Parnassus; if the red were here,
As I have seen't enthron'd, the rising day would get
New excellence by being compar'd to her:
Argos nor Cyprus [nor] Egypt ne'er saw
A beauty like to this; let it be lawful for me to usurp

So much on death's right, as to take a kiss
From thy cold virgin-lips, where he and love Yet strive for empire. The flames that rise from hence

Are not less violent, though less pleasing now,
Than when she did consent I should receive
What now I ravish.

MOOR. Dares not death shut those eyes, where
love

Hath enter'd once, or am I in the shades
Assisted with the ghost of my dear Lysicles?

LYS. She speaks again: good heaven, she speaks
again!

HER. You are yet living?

¹ [Old copy, but.]

MOOR. And, therefore dying ; but, before I go,
 Let me obtain your pardon for the wrongs
 My jealousy hath thrown upon your innocence.
 'Twas my too perfect knowledge of my want
 Of merit to deserve, made me doubt yours :
 I mean your constant love, which I will teach
 Below, and make them learn again to love
 Who have died for it.

LYS. Do not abuse your mercy and my grief
 By asking pardon of your murtherer ;
 But curse your sufferings off on this devoted head.

To save the beauty of the world in you.

MOOR. Why should your grief make me repent
 the joys

I ever begg'd of heaven—the knowledge
 Of your love ? Could there be added more Unto my happiness, than to be confirm'd
 By my own sufferings, how much you did love me,
 And prosecuted those that desired my ruin ?
 Like Semele I die, who could not take
 The full God in her arms.

I have but one wish more, that I may bear
 Unto the shades the glorious title of your wife :
 If I may live so long to hear but this Pronounc'd by Lysicles, I die in peace.

LYS. Hear it, with my vows not to behold
 The sun rise after you are gone.

MOOR. O, say not so ; live, I command you,
 live ;

Let your obedience unto this command
 Show you have lost a mistress.

LYS. Can I hear this and live ?

IRE. My lord, our cares will be employed better
 In seeking to avert this lady's death
 Than in deploring it.

LYS. You advise well. Run all to the physician :
 I will myself to Arnaldo, who gave

This poison to me. Let me have word sent to the Cypress grove the minute she is dead.

[Exeunt. Draw in the bed.]

Enter LYSICLES meditating.

LYS. If life be given as a blessing to us,
What law compels us to preserve it longer
Than we can see a possibility
Of being happy by it, but we must expect,
Till the same power that plac'd us here, commands
A restitution of His gift? This is indeed a rule
To make us live, but not livè happily.
'Tis true, the slave that frees himself by death,
Doth wrong his master; but yet the gods are not Necessitous of us, but we of them.
Who then is injur'd if I kill myself?
And if I durst to hear their voice, they call Men to some other place, when they remove
The gust and taste of this. We should adore, thee, death,
If constant virtue, not enforcement, built
Thy spacious temples.

Enter EUGENIO.

Welcome, Eugenio, welcome, worthy friend;
How long are you arriv'd?

EUG. Time enough to revenge, though not prevent
The injuries you have done me.

LYS. What means my friend?

EUG. I must not hear that name now; you have lost
The effects and virtue of it: I come to punish
Your breach of faith.

LYS. Is hell afraid my constancy should conquer
The mischiefs that are rais'd to swallow me,
That it invents new plagues to batter me?

By all that's holy, I never did offend my friend—
Not in a thought.

EUG. Those that by breach of vows provoke their justice

Do seldom fear profaning of their names ;
To hide their perjuries will put it on them.
You have attempted my Hermione,
And fore'd her father to compel her voice
Unto your marriage.

LYS. All this I do confess ; but 'twas for both your goods,
As I will now inform you.

EUG. Hell and furies ! Because your specious titles,
Your spreading vineyards, and your gilded house
Do shine upon our cottage, must our faiths,
Which heaven did seal, be cancell'd ? 'Twas my virtue
Won her fair graces, which still outshine
Your flames of vice.

LYS. It hath not light enough to let you see your friend.
Gods, could that man have liv'd that dar'd to say

Eugenio did suspect his Lysicles ?
And now in pity you do show him me,
That I may fly the world without regret,
Not leaving one of worth behind me in it.
Be gone, and learn your errors.

EUG. I have done't already. They were trusting you
With my life's happiness. Draw, and restore the vows

You made Hermione ; or I will leave you dead,
And tear them from your heart.

LYS. Fond man ! thou dost not know how much
'tis in
My power to make thee miserable :

I could now force thee execute my wish
 In killing me ; and thou wouldst fly the light,
 When it had show'd thee whom thy rage offended.
 But till I fall by my own hand, my life
 Is chain'd unto my honour, which I will wear
 Upon my sepulchre. Nor must I die,
 Being guilty of Milesia's murder,
 For any cause but hers ; else were my breast,
 Since you have wrong'd me, open to your point.

EUG. Can you deny but that you have attempted
 The faith of my Hermione ?

LYS. I can with so strong circumstance of truth
 Would make you blush for having doubted mine.
 But he that was my friend, and suspects me,
 Must attend less satisfaction than a stranger.
 Proceed, and let your case be both your judge and guide.

EUG. What should I do ? I dare not trust my sense,
 If he should tell me that it does deceive me :
 Virtue itself would lose her quality
 Ere he forsook her, and his words do fall
 Distorted from him ; his soul doth labour
 Under some heavy burden, which my passion
 Did hinder me from seeing. Sir, forgive,
 Or take your full revenge ; let your own griefs
 Teach you to pity those are distract with it.
 I will not rise until you pardon me.

LYS. O my Eugenio, thy kindness hath undone
 me !
 My rage did choke my grief, which now did spread Itself over my soul and body. Up, and help
 To bear me till I fall eternally.

EUG. Who can hear this, and not be turn'd to marble ?
 Good sir, impart your sorrows ; I may bring comfort.

LYS. Whilst they were capable, thou didst ; but
now

They are too great and swoll'n to let it in.
Milesia, whom you and I supposed dead,
By me to-day is poison'd, and lies dying
In her torment. Is not this strange ?

EUG. What have you said that is not ?
But heaven avert this last !

LYS. It is too late now ; let me beg thy kindness

Would do that for me I forbade thy passion.

EUG. What is't ?

LYS. Kill me.

EUG. You cannot wish me such an hated office :
Call up your reason and your courage to you,
Which was not given you only for the wars,
But to resist the batteries of fortune.
People will say that Lysicles did want
Part of that courage fame did speak him lord of,
When they shall hear him sunk below her succour.

LYS. You will not kill me then ?

EUG. When I believe there is no other means
To ease you, I will do't.

LYS. All but death are fled.

EUG. Then draw your sword, and as I lift my arm

To sheathe this in your breast, let yours pierce
me ;

On this condition I may do your will.

LYS. I may not for the world. Why should you die ?

EUG. See how your passions blind you ! Is death

An ease or torment ? If it be a joy,
Why should you envy it your dearest friend ?

LYS. Our causes are not equal.

EUG. They will be, when you're dead. How you mistake

The laws of friendship, and commit those faults
You did accuse me of! I would not live so long
To think you can survive your dying friend.

LYS. Eugenio, I am conquered; yet I hope thy kindness

Will do that for me which thy sword refuseth.
Love thy Hermione: she deserves it. Friend,
Leave me alone awhile.

EUG. Your grief's too great for me to trust your life with't:

I dare not venture you beyond my help.

WITHIN. Where's Prince Lysicles? Where's
Prince Lysicles?

LYS. Hark! I am call'd, the fatal news is come.

[Draws.

EUG. Fie! how unmanly's this? Can sounds
affright you,

Which yet you know not whether they do bring
Or joys or sorrows? When remedies are despair'd
of,

You have still leave to die. Perhaps she lives,
And you'll exhale her soul into your wounds,
And be the death of her you mourn for living.

WITHIN. Where's Prince Lysicles? Where's
Prince Lysicles?

EUG. It is the voice of comfort; none would strive

To be a sad relator. I'll call him. Holla!
Here he is.

Enter a SERVANT.

SER. The strange lady kisses
Your hands, my lord: Arnaldo has restored her;
She bid me say your sight can only give Perfection to what he has begun.

EUG. Will you die now?

LYS. Softly, good friend: gently let it
Slide into my breast; my heart is too narrow yet

To take so full a joy in.
You're sure this news is true?

SER. Upon my life.

EUG. Why should you doubt it?

LYS. My comforts ever were like winter suns.
That rise late and [then] set betimes: set with thick clouds

That hide their light at noon. But be this true,
And I have life enough to let me see it,
I shall be ever happy.

EUG. So, 'tis well;

At length his hope hath taught despair to fear.

[Exeunt.]

Enter MILEZIA, HERMIONE, IRENE, PHYSICIAN.

PHY. Madam, my innocence will plead my pardon; I could not guess for whom my lord intended it. The truth is I feared, considering his deep melancholy, he intended to use it on himself, and therefore meant to make him out of love with death, by suffering the pains our souls do feel when they are violenc'd from us. I had provided antidotes, but could not till this hour learn on whom it was employ'd. Sure I was, it could be death to none, though full of torment.

MIL. Till I have farther means to thank you, receive this ring.

HER. But, madam, what did poor¹ Hermione deserve,

That you should hide yourself from her?

Or are you the Milesia that was pleas'd

To call me friend? or is she buried

By Pallas' temple? Truly, belief and memory,

Opposing sense, makes me doubt which to credit.

¹ [Old copy, your poor.]

I wept you dead, the virgins did entomb you :
Were we then or no deceiv'd ?

MIL. My fair dear friend, you shall know all my story.

'Tis true, my uncle did design my death
For loving Lysicles ; for, at his coming hither,
He charg'd me, by all ties that were between us,
To hate him as the ruin of his honour ;
And yet, for some dark ends I understood not,
Resolv'd to leave me here. I swore obedience,
But knew not what offence it was to keep
An oath so made, till I had seen Lysicles,
Which at your house I did, when he came wounded
From hunting of the boar. All but his name
Appear'd most godlike to me. You all did run
To stop his wounds, and I thought I might see
My enemy's blood ; yet soon did pity seize me,
To see him bleed. Thus, love taking the shape
Of pity, glided unseen of me into my heart.
And whilst I thought myself but charitable,
I nurs'd my infant love with milk of pity,
Till he grew strong enough to take me prisoner.
I found his eyes on mine, and ere I could Remove them, heard him say, he'd thank his fortune
For this last wound, if 'twere the cause
Of seeing me ; then took his leave,
But left me speechless that I could not say,
My heart, farewell ! After this visit our loves Grew to that height that you have heard of.

HER. The groves and temples, and dark shades have heard

Them mourn'd and celebrated by your friend.

MIL. I had a servant unsuspected of me,
(For none I trusted that observ'd our meetings.)
Who¹ guessing by my sighs that love had made them,

¹ [Old copy, and.

Betray'd them to my uncle. On Pallas' eye
 He rush'd into my chamber, his sword drawn,
 And snatch'd me by the arm. I fell down,
 But, knowing yet no fault, could beg no pardon.
 Awhile our eyes did only speak our thoughts ;
 At length out of his bosom he pull'd a paper :
 It was the contract betwixt my lord and me ;
 And ask'd me if I would avow the hand.
 Heaven, said I, has approv'd it, and the gods
 Have chose this way to reunite our houses.
 Stain of thy kindred's honour, he exclaims,
 Was there no other man to ease your lust
 But he that was our greatest enemy ?
 Resolve to die : thy blood shall hide the stains
 Of our dishonour.

HER. He could not be so cruel to intend it !

MIL. He was ; for leaving me oppress'd with sighs

And tears, yet not of sorrow and repentance,
 But fear that I should leave my dearest servant,
 Commands his cruel slaves to murder me
 As I descended ; and lest pity should Create remorse in their obdurate hearts,
 The lights were all put out. Then hastily
 My name was heard. I then entreated her
 That betray'd me to tell them I was coming,
 And took this time to write unto my lord.
 She went, but by the way was seiz'd
 And strangled by those murderers
 That expected me. My uncle heard
 Her latest groans ; and now the act was pass'd
 His power to help, he wish'd it were undone :
 Brings lights to see the body, and perceiv'd
 The strange mistake. By signs and lifted eyes Confess'd heaven's hand was in't ; yet would not leave
 His revenge here — commands his slaves to change

My clothes with hers was slain ; then takes the head off,

And on the trunk did leave a note which told
My death for loving Lysicles, in hope my ruin,
Knowing his noble nature, would be his.
At midnight quits this town, leaving none behind
Were conscious of the fact—immures me in
His house ; till I escap'd in that disguise
I wore when I first came to you.

IRE. Why did

You not declare yourself when you came hither ?

MIL. You were the cause on't. At my arrival
here

I heard my Lysicles should marry you,
And therefore kept the habit I was in,
To search unknown the truth of this report,
And practis'd in the private actions
Of some near friends, got an opinion
I could presage the future. Thus was I Sought by you, thus [I] found the faith
Of my dear Lysicles, when at the tomb I did Appear his ghost, and had reveal'd myself, had not The shame of doubting such a faith kept my desires in.

HER. Then he dissembled when he made love
to me ?

MIL. He did. Forgive it him ; 'twas for his friend.

HER. I am sorry for it.

MIL. How, my dear friend ?

Enter LYSICLES and EUGENIO.

HER. Nay, it is true.

Eugenio and he are of such equal
Tempers I shall suspect he has dissembled too.

MIL. O, you are pleasant !

Here comes my lord.

LYS. Is there a wish beyond this happiness,
When I embrace thee thus ? I will not ask
Thy story now : it is enough to know
That you are living.

MIL. The gods have made this trial in my sufferings,
If I deserv'd so great a blessing :
I have but one grief left.

LYS. Is that word yet on earth ?

MIL. Yes, but it springs from an excessive joy
Of finding such admired worth in you.
What I hereafter shall do in your service
Must wear the name of gratitude, not love.

LYS. No, my Milesia,
Mine was the first engagement, and the gods
Made thee so excellent to keep on earth
Love that was flying hence, finding no object
Worthy to fix him here.

HER. No more, Eugenio : if your words could add
Expressions to your love, you had not had
So much of mine ; and after I have tried
Your faith so many ways, it would appear Ingratitude, not modesty, to show
A mistress' coldness.

EUG. May I believe all advantageous words,
Or may I doubt them, seeing they come from you,
Who are all truth ? I will not speak
How undeserving I am of these favours,
Because I will not wrong th' election
Your gracious pity forceth on your judgment.

LYS. Our joys do multiply ; but, my dear friend,
I have yet something that will add to yours.
My father's call'd to court, and you are left Governor in his place ; this, I know, will make Lord Pindarus consent to both your wishes.
Your pardon, madam, and when you lie embrac'd
With your Eugenio, tell him, if my faith

Had not the double tie of friend and mistress,
A single one had yielded to the hopes
Of the enjoying you. Here comes my lord !

Enter PINDARUS.

O my good lord, I must entreat your pardon
For a fault my love unto my friend engag'd me
in :

Let your consent complete the happiness
Of these two perfect lovers ; I am confident
You ever did approve his virtue : his fortune now
Can be no hindrance, since our gracious king,
In contemplation of his merits,
Hath made him governor in my father's place.

PIN. Most willingly I give it, since I've lost the Hopes of being allied to you : heaven bless you both !

Sir, your own love of my Hermione,
And yours now, will teach you t' admit
An easy satisfaction for the troubles
My love unto my child hath thrown upon you.

EUG. You are all goodness, and my services,
Ever directed by your will, shall show,
Though I can never merit this great honour,
I will do nothing shall deprive me of
The honour of your love and favour.

PIN. Your virtue promiseth more than I may hear

From you. Once more, heaven bless you !
If my Lord Ergasto now were satisfied,
I shall be at peace ; for, having promised
My daughter to him, I would not have him
Think that by me he's injur'd.

HER. 'Tis in your power, sir, to satisfy him.

PIN. I would do anything.

HER. Persuade my cousin to confess she loves
him,

Which I do know she does ; and he already
Has made profession of his unto my prejudice :
Nay, blush not, cousin, since you would not allow
me

This secret as a friend, you may excuse
Th' inquisitiveness of a rival.

MIL. This is all truth, my lord, I can assure
you.

PIN. Is't possible, Irene, do you love Ergasto ?

IRE. Methinks your experience, uncle, should teach you

That such a question was not to be ask'd.
Well, if I did love ¹ him, 'twas 'cause I thought
That he lov'd me ; but if he does not,
I pardon him : for I am certain he Once believ'd it himself.

PIN. If ever love
Make any deep impression in you,
I am deceiv'd.

IRE. His dart may strike as far into me
As into another, for aught you know, uncle.

PIN. You have ill-luck else, niece.

Enter PHORMIO, ERGASTO, CLEON.

PHOR. Nay, it is most certain, the town is full of it :

Milesia, I know not how, is alive again :
Eugenio is made governor ; though you were constant,

You can have no longer hopes of Hermione :
Therefore let me advise you, make that seem
Your own election which'll else be enforcement :
Quit your interest in Hermione, and renew
Your suit to Irene.

¹ [Dodsley omitted love.]

ERG. Observe me.

PIN. Welcome, my lords, do you know this lady ?

ERG. Most perfectly, and came to congratulate
With the prince for her double recovery.

LYS. I thank you, my lord ; and when my friend and you

Are reconcil'd, you may assure yourself.

I am your servant.

ERG. What's in my power to give him satisfaction,

He may command.

EUG. Your friendship does it.

PIN. My lord, this reconciliation will make way Unto my pardon : I have not been wanting
In my promise to you ; but my daughter thinks
she

Has chosen so well that, without my leave,
She hath made herself her own disposer.

ERG. Ages of happiness attend them ! If I may hope to gain the graces of the fair Irene, I shall be happy too.

PIN. If I have any power, she shall be yours.

LYS. Let me beg the honour of interceding ;
your fortunes and conditions are so equal, it were a sin to part you.

PHOR. Pray, sir, let him do it himself : the task is not so hard to require a mediator.

IRE. Have you such skill in perspective ?

PHOR. As good as any chiromancer in Egypt,
madam.

ERG. He has reason, for I have opened my breast to him, and he has seen my heart, and you enthroned in't.

PHOR. He tells you true, lady.

IRE. Indeed, sir ! And pray, what did it look like ?

PHOR. Faith, to deal truly, much like the wheel of fortune which, turning round, puts the same persons sometimes at top, sometimes at bottom : but at last love shot his dart thorough the axle-tree, and fixed you regent.

IRE. Well, I have considered, and my cousin's example shall teach me.

ERG. What, in the name of doubt ?

IRE. To avoid the infinite troubles you procured her by your fruitless solicitations. D'ye think your tears shall cost me so many tears as they have done her ?

PIN. You may excuse them by consenting to your friend's desires.

MIL. Sweet madam, let me obtain this for him. He dies if you deny him.

HER. Dear Irene, perfect the happiness of this day.

IRE. You have great reason to persuade me to take him you abhorred.

HER. I was engaged.

IRE. Well, if any here will pass their words he can continue constant a week, I will be disposed by you.

OMNES. We all will be engaged for him.

IRE. On this condition I admit him to a month's service, and myself to a perpetual servitude.

ERG. I ever shall be yours.

IRE. My father said so, till my mother wept.¹

EUG. A notable wooing this !

LYS. And as notably finish'd.

Let's now unto my father, who expects
You, to deliver his commission to you.
Come, my Milesia, tell my wounded heart
No more her sighs shall wander through the air,
Not knowing where to find thee : no more
Shall the mistaken tomb of false Enone

¹ [Some of the sallies of the fair Irene remind us of Shakespeare's Beatrice.]

Be moist'ned with my tears ; yet, since she died
To save thy life, her ghost could not expect
A cheaper sacrifice. This I'll only add :
In memory of us, all lovers shall Repute this day as their great festival.

FINIS.

Dodsley		PR
AUTHOR	1263
A select collection of		.D7
TITLE	v.12
old English plays
DATE	ISSUED TO

Dodsley PR
1263.
A select collection of old .D7
English plays v.12

